77. ————— Penal Code, ss. 192, 218—Public servant.—A police officer, who had suppressed a document intrusted to him to forward to his superior officer, made a false entry in his official diary that the document had been so forwarded, intending that, if he were prosecuted under the Police Act for suppressing the document, such entry might be used as evidence in his behalf that he had so forwarded the document. Held that, inasmuch as to constitute the offence of fabricating false evidence defined in s. 192 of the Penal Code, the evidence fabricated must be admissible evidence, and as, if such police officer had been prosecuted under the Police Act, the entry in the diary would not have been admissible in his behalf, though, contrary to his intention, it might have been used against him, such police officer was improperly convicted, in respect of such entry, of fabricating false evidence punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code. Held also that, such police officer's intention in making such entry being to screen himself from punishment, he was not punishable under s. 218 of the Code. *EMPERESS v. 78. ————— Penal Code, s. 218—Public servant.—A treasury accountant was convicted of offences under ss. 218 and 465 of the Penal Code under the following circumstances: A sum of Rs500, which was in the treasury and was payable to a particular person through a Civil Court, was drawn out and paid away to other persons by means of forged cheques. After the withdrawal of the Rs500, but before such withdrawal had been discovered, the representative of the payee applied for payment. The prisoner then, upon two occasions, wrote reports to the effect that the Rs500 in question then stood at the payee's credit as a revenue deposit, and that it was about to be transferred to the Civil Court. Upon the first of these reports, an order was signed by the treasury officer for the transfer of the money to the Civil Court concerned, and to effect such transfer, a cheque was prepared by the sale-mohurrir, which as originally drawn up related to the sum of Rs500 already mentioned. The signature of the cheque by the treasury officer was delayed for some time, and meanwhile the cheque was altered by the prisoner in such a manner as to make it relate to another deposit of Rs500 which had been made subsequently to the above, and to the credit of another person. The result of this was the transfer of the second payee's Rs500 to the Civil Court, as if it had been the first Rs500, and to the credit of the first payee's representative. The prisoner was convicted under s. 465 of the Penal Code in respect of the cheque, and under s. 218 in respect of the two reports above referred to. Held that the prisoner's intention in making the false reports was to stave off the discovery of the previous fraud and save himself or the actual perpetrator of that fraud from legal punishment, and that, having prepared the reports in a manner which he knew to be incorrect, he was rightly convicted under s. 218 of the Penal Code. Held further that, as the prisoner, who was a public servant, made these reports and assumed to make them in due course and as a part of his duty and held them out as reports which were made by the proper officer, and as no question was put in the examination of the witnesses from the office which suggested that it was not his business to make such reports, it must be inferred that he made them because it was his business to do so, and as a public servant within the meaning of s. 218 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. The two statements were contradictory, and no evidence was given to show which of them was false. It was not proved that the statement made to the police-officer was made in answer to questions put by him, and the only evidence given at the trial with regard to the inquiry upon which the police officer was engaged was to the effect that an enquiry was being made about the burning of a house. The jury acquitted the accused, and the case was referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict of acquittal. Held that the verdict was right. Before a conviction in such a case can be sustained, it must, having regard to the provisions of s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be clearly proved by the evidence that the statement made to the police-officer was a statement in answer to questions put to the accused by the investigating police-officer, and in the absence of such evidence, even though the statement were proved to be false, a conviction could not be sustained. Held, further, that in such a case it is also necessary for the prosecution to establish that the police-constable was making an investigation under Ch. 6. ————— Intention of falsely personating.—It is necessary to a conviction for false personation, under s. 205 of the Penal Code, that the accused should have assumed the name and character of the person he is charged with having personated. Pending this decision, a Full Bench disposed of questions of law as to the admissibility in evidence in this suit of the judgment and record in a prior suit; in which it had been found, as a fact, that there had been at one time in existence an heir born of the parentage which the defence in this suit alleged to be that of the minor defendant. It was disputed in the present suit whether the minor defendant was the same individual whom his alleged mother, the defendant in the former suit (there being the same plaintiff in both suits), stated to be her son; also whether, if that identity were proved, the suit would be barred as res judicata. This latter question was decided in the negative by the Full Bench, which held the judgment in the former suit not to be conclusive upon the present one, but also held the record to be admissible. There was no appeal from that decision; and on an appeal from the decree of the Divisional Court, the Judicial Committee affirmed on the facts the decree made. *PALAKDHARI SINGH v. Wrongful arrest under decree already satisfied—Mistake of officers of the Court—Cause of action—Good faith—Limitation: Act XI of 1877 s 20 and sch II art 19—On the 27th June 1883 the plaintiff was arrested by a bailiff of the Small Cause Court at Bombay under a writ of arrest for the amount of a decree obtained by the defendant on the 2nd May 1883 against the plaintiff. On arrest the plaintiff informed the bailiff that the money due under the decree had already been paid and was the fact. Plaintiff could not produce the receipt of payment and the bailiff refused to raise the arrest until payment was made. The plaintiff thereupon paid the money under protest and was set at liberty. The mistake was subsequently discovered and the money was refunded to the plaintiff. In conformity with the usual practice of the Court the clerk of the Court on receipt of the certificate issued the writ of arrest under the seal of the Small Cause Court and the plaintiff was arrested. In March 1884 the plaintiff presented a petition to the High Court for leave to sue as pauper and claimed Rs 20,000 from the first defendant as damages for the wrongful arrest. When the petition came on for enquiry into the pauperism of the plaintiff the presiding Judge was of opinion that it disclosed no cause of action and the plaintiff was returned to the plaintiff to be amended but at the same time allowed to be filed. The plaintiff subsequently desired to add as party defendants the cashier and the chief clerk of the Small Cause Court, and on 5th July 1884 took out a summons calling upon the defendants to show cause why his amended plaint should not be received on the file of the Court in place of his first petition. It was contended for the cashier and the chief clerk of the Small Cause Court that the suit against them was barred by limitation. Held, as regards the first ferry.—Held that there is nothing in the law of Bengal as it was before the acquisition by the British Government or in the Regulations before or after 1793 to show that any person is entitled to claim a monopoly of a right of ferry by prescription or by any other means than a grant from the Crown. To such a monopoly Part IV (ss. 26, 27, 28) of the Limitation Act of 1877 relating to the acquisition of ownership by prescription is not applicable. The franchise of a ferry is not necessarily appurtenant to land, but where a right of ferry was claimed as appurtenant to certain villages,—Held that the grant of such right by the Crown would not be destroyed by mere non-user without waiver, nor by the running of an opposition ferry. The franchise would continue as long as the grant continued, and until the person who set up an opposition ferry could show a Crown grant or give evidence from which a Crown grant could be presumed, the cause of action would remain. The disturbance of a right of ferry is in the nature of a nuisance (*Yard v. 4. ——— Right to soil and water in one person—Interest in the soil.—Though the right of jalkar does not imply any interest in the soil, yet where it is found as a fact that both water and land are the property of the zamindar as such, the two rights are not to be separated. *CHUNDER CGOMAR ROY v. 26. ——— Jalkar—Private and public rights.—A private right of fishery in a tidal navigable river must, if it exists at all, be derived from the Crown and established by very clear evidence, as the presumption is against any such private right. Quere—Whether such right can be created at all. A mere recital in quinquennial papers that a person is the owner of jalkar rights in a zamindari permanently settled with him by Government is not sufficient to give to such person a right of fishery in a public navigable river; any right granted under such word “jalkar” would be perfectly satisfied if construed to apply exclusively to a right to fish within enclosed water, such as a jhil. PROSUNNO COOMAR SIRCAR v. RAM COOMAR PAROOR . . . . . [I. L. R., 4 Calc., 53]

27. ——— Right of fishery in tidal river—Prescription.—The right of the public to fish in tidal waters in British India may be curtailed by an exclusive privilege acquired by grant or prescription by certain persons within certain limits. Such an exclusive privilege, being an infringement of the general rights of the public, could be acquired by a period of enjoyment which would suffice for the acquisition of an easement against the Crown. VIRESA v. TATAYYA . . . . . I. L. R., 8 Mad., 467

28. ——— Right of fishery in tidal navigable river—Grant of rights by Crown—Grant, where there is no title by prescription, must be proved—Evidence as to nature and extent of grant.—The exclusive right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers may be granted by the Crown to private individuals. Such a right must ordinarily be proved either by proof of a direct grant from the Crown or by prescription. In the absence of title by grant or prescription in persons alleging themselves to be the holders of a jalkar under an ijara, the mere payment of rent by fishermen to former ijaradars does not estop such fishermen from disputing the rights of the alleged holders; but such payment for the use of the jalkar right is strong evidence of the rights of the alleged holders of the ijara, and of acquiescence in their title. In the case of a grant of a jalkar, in ascertaining what the boundaries of the jalkar are, or what rights of fishery are contained within those boundaries, whether the subject of the grant be in tidal navigable rivers or not, the Courts should be guided by the same rules of evidence

as would be applicable for the purpose of determining the nature and extent of any other grant. Per PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ.—Unless the boundaries given in a grant of a jalkar clearly indicate to the contrary, a grant of a jalkar would not ordinarily include the right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers. HORI DAS MAL v. 29. ——— User—Prescription.—Plaintiffs claimed right to catch fish in a tidal river at a certain place by putting up stake nets across the river. This right was alleged to be based on custom which was not denied by defendants, and user for thirty years was proved. The claim was decreed. Held that plaintiffs were not bound to prove sixty years' exclusive user to support their claim. NARASAYYA v. SANI . . . . . I. L. R., 12 Mad., 43

30. ——— Right of Government in navigable rivers and fishery therein—Grant by Government of right to private individuals.—As regards this side of India, the bed of a tidal navigable river is vested in the Crown; and the right of fishery in such river, as also the bed of the river itself, may be granted by Government (whether it be in the exercise of their prerogative as the Crown or as representing the public) to private individuals to be held by them as private property, subject to the right of navigation and such other rights as the public has in such rivers. *Doe d. 31. ——— Right of fishing in the sea—Right of suit—Right of the Crown—Public rights.—Rights of the Crown and of the public in the waters and the subjacent soil of the sea discussed. The right of the public to fish in the sea, whether it and its subjacent soil be or be not vested in the Crown, is common, and is not the subject of property. That right may, in certain portions of the sea, be regulated by local custom. Members of the public, exercising the common right to fish in the sea, are bound to exercise that right in a fair and reasonable manner, and not so as to impede others from doing the same; and conduct which prevents another from a fair exercise of his equal right, if special injury thereby results to him, is actionable. BABAN MATACHA v. decree by the Subordinate Judge, a notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code was served on the judgment-debtor, calling on him to show cause why the decree should not be executed, and an order was forthwith issued for the attachment of his property. The judgment-debtor appeared and objected that the copy of the record was not properly certified, and therefore that the whole of the execution-proceedings were bad. The Subordinate Judge ordered that the record be sent back to the Cooch Behar Court through the District Judge in order that a certificate might be given in proper form, and directed that the other points raised should be decided after the return of the papers. On appeal it was urged that the order of the Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, but the District Judge rejected the appeal. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court. Held that the Subordinate Judge acted properly in sending the record back to the Cooch Behar Court to be properly certified, and also that he should have set aside the execution-proceedings as being altogether void, but, as that formed no portion of the grounds of appeal urged in the lower Appellate Court, the appeal should be dismissed. *GANEE MAHOMED SARKAR v. 5. — Suits in British Court on judgments and decrees of Courts established in recognized foreign States—Territorial jurisdiction of each separate State in personal actions—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 431 and 434—Right of suit.—Jurisdiction, being properly territorial and attaching, with certain restrictions, upon every person permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, does not follow a foreigner, after his withdrawal thence, living in another State. As to land within the territory, jurisdiction always exists, and may exist over moveables within it, and exists in questions of status or succession governed by domicile. But no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction, which a Court of a foreign State ought to recognize, over an absent foreigner owing no allegiance to the State so legislating. In a personal action, to which none of the above causes of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced by a Court of a foreign State, in absentem, the latter not having submitted himself to its authority, is by international law a nullity. Not to the Courts of the State in which the cause of action has arisen, nor in cases of contract to those of the locus solutionis, should resort be had by the plaintiffs, but to the Courts of the State in which the defendant resides, the Courts of the latter State having jurisdiction in all personal actions. Ex-parte decrees for money were made in the territories of the ruling Chief of Faridkot, a State in subordinate alliance with the Government of India, against a person who had been employed by that State within its territories, but had, before suit brought, relinquished his employment, had left the State, and was then, at the time when he was sued, resident in another State of which he was the domiciled subject. Held that these decrees were a nullity by international law, and could not receive effect in a British Indian Court. Becquet v. Macarthy, 2 B. & Ad., 951, distinguished. The judgment

6. — Private international law—Suit in British Court on foreign judgment—Territorial jurisdiction—British subject—Domicile—Nationality—Decree of foreign Court as evidence in Court in British India—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 13.—A foreign Court has no jurisdiction over a person who is a British subject domiciled and residing in British India, who was not within the territorial jurisdiction of that Court either at the time when a suit was brought against him or previously, and who never subjected himself by any act of his, such as by appearing and defending the suit, to the jurisdiction of that Court. A decree passed by a foreign Court against such a person cannot be given effect to in a Court in British India. Even if there be in such a case any special territorial legislation giving jurisdiction to the foreign Court, such legislation cannot be recognized by a Court in British India. Nationality is determined by birth on the soil, and not by citizenship by descent. There is a distinction between a case in which a defendant puts forward a foreign judgment as a bar to a suit under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a case in which a plaintiff seeks to enforce a foreign judgment. In the former, it may fairly be supposed that the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot, I. L. R., 22 Cal., 222: L. R., 21 I. 7. — Decree "in absentem"—Submission to jurisdiction—Suit on judgment of foreign Court.—The plaintiff brought a suit in the French Court at Karikal against the defendant, a British subject, resident in British India. The defendant employed a vakil to defend the suit, but, on the case coming on for hearing, the vakil stated he had no instructions, and an ex-parte decree was passed. An application by the defendant to have the decree set aside was held to be time-barred. The plaintiff now brought a suit on the judgment of the French Court to recover the amount decreed to him. Held that the suit was not maintainable for the reason that the decree had been passed against the defendant in absentem by a foreign Court, to which he had not submitted himself. Semble—Even if the foreign judgment had not been entirely invalid as against the defendant, the British Court would have had jurisdiction to disallow an item of claim allowed by the foreign Court on account of prospective damages which was unsupported by evidence. *SIVARAMAN CHETTI v. the Superintendent of the Jail to show cause why they should not be set at liberty. In the affidavits filed in showing cause against the rule the only reason suggested for their arrest was that they were connected with loose women residing in a certain district of Bombay. It was contended for the prisoners that their arrest and imprisonment were illegal (1) inasmuch as Act III of 1864 was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature; (2) that the Act, being intended only to secure the "peace and security" of British India, was in this case improperly applied. Held (1) that Act III of 1864 was not ultra vires of the Governor-General of India in Council; (2) that it was rightly applied in the case of the foreigners in question, although their residing in Bombay may not have been likely to have affected or endangered the peace and security of British India. Per STABLING, J.—S. 3 of Act III of 1864 gives the fullest power to the Government to order any foreigner to remove himself from British India. The Government is the sole judge of what is necessary for the peace and security of British India, and, if it acted in accordance with the letter of the Act, the Court could not inquire into the sufficiency of its reasons for so acting. *ALTER CAUFMAN v. which it possessed previously to 1823." The accused was khot of the village of Asgoli in the Ratnagiri District. He was charged, under s. 75, cl. (c), of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), with the offence of cutting down two teak trees without obtaining the permission of Government as required by the rules framed by Government under the Forest Act. He contended that he was absolute owner of the trees under Dunlop's proclamation. He was convicted, and applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction. Held that the conviction must be reversed. The land on which the trees in question were growing was the khoti khasgi land of the accused, and he was therefore entitled to the benefit of Dunlop's proclamation, by virtue of which the trees thereon became his property. Held also that Dunlop's proclamation could not be withdrawn by Government. Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatray Narayan Surve, 8 Bom., A. C., 1, followed. Per FULTON, J.—Khasgi land, of which the khot was actually in possession, was clearly within Dunlop's proclamation, and it granted the right to teak and other trees in khasgi lands held by vatandar khots. . . . It is clear, too, that the right to trees, having once been conceded, could not be withdrawn by the proclamation of 1851, and it seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest, having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow thereafter, could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees. IN RE ANTAJI KESHAV TAMBE . . . timber and wood collected by their officers, which, however, may be claimed by the true owner, who may be a person holding a jalkar or water right, comprehending those things. The conditions are that the officers of Government shall store the timber in the manner and issue the notifications, required by the Act. In case of such procedure not being followed, and the wood being treated as the property of the Government, the latter are, in the event of the wood being found not to belong to them in no better position than any other trespasser. The title to collect given to the Government by the Act is coupled with, and dependent upon, the duty of giving notice to the public, in order that the true owner, whether he be a person from whom the wood has drifted away or the owner of a jalkar or however he may be entitled, may claim the drifted timber in the manner, and within the time, prescribed by the Act. By a subsequent order under s 54 of the same Act their boats were confiscated. Held that under the terms of s 54 an order of confiscation cannot be regarded as an order incidental on the conviction. The confiscation is by the terms of that section declared to be a punishment, for it is in addition to any other punishment prescribed for the offence. That, being a punishment, the order should have been passed simultaneously with the other punishment for the offence of which the accused have been convicted. Impress v Nathu Khan, I. L. The Government having left the property of the convicts in the hands of the Administrator General as administrator to the estate of the convicts' father whence it was derived, in whose hands it was allowed to accumulate pending a separate litigation in respect of that estate, while it asserted its right by virtue of the confiscation to other property of the convicts the title to which was undisputed, it was held that the Government had sufficiently declared and acted upon its intention to enforce the confiscation. The Queen's proclamation of amnesty (November 1858), coming after the conviction and confiscation, had not the effect of re-vesting in the convicts the property confiscated. Held also that the property in question, being Government paper, was liable to confiscation; and lastly, that N's widow was not entitled to maintenance out of the property confiscated by the State. *GUNGA BAE v. sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (1) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s. 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered challan; (2) with forgery (s. 467) in respect of the challan; and (3) with using a forged document (s. 471) in respect of the same document. The accused was convicted on all these charges. It was contended that the charge under ss. 467 and 471 were bad, as there was no evidence to support them, and even admitting the alteration of the challan such alteration did not come within the term "forgery" as used in the Penal Code, not having been made with the intention of causing any wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but with the intention of screening the offence of criminal breach of trust which had been previously committed. Held, further, that it is not necessary for the purpose of constituting the offence of forgery that the false document should be made with the intention of committing a fraud or dishonesty in the future, and that, if the intention with which a false document is made be to conceal a fraudulent act which has been previously committed, the intention cannot be other than to commit fraud, and the offence of forgery as defined in s. 463 is committed. The word "fraudulently" as used in s. 464 must not be taken as being the same as "dishonestly" and implying wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but must be taken to mean as "with intent to defraud." *Empress of India v. The accused, in order to save an estate from forfeiture, made a false entry of rent received in a public book kept by him for the purpose of informing the Collector as to the rents which had been paid into the Collectorate, and as to what estates the rents were in arrear, so that he might take steps to enforce payment, and was convicted by the Sessions Judge of an offence under s 465 of the Penal Code. It subsequently appeared that the receipt was one for R8, which the debtor had altered by adding the figure "1," so as to make it appear that the receipt was for R18. Held that the real intent in the prisoner's mind being to induce his superior officer to refrain from the illegal act of stopping a portion of his salary, the Court in a criminal case ought not to speculate as to some other intent over and above this that might have presented itself to him, that it did not necessarily follow that he contemplated setting up the altered receipt to defeat his creditor's claim, and that therefore he ought not to have been convicted of an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. A prisoner, who was charged with attempting to commit forgery of a valuable security, was found guilty by the jury of attempting to commit forgery. The jury explained their finding by saying that the prisoner had ordered certain receipt forms to be printed similar to those used by the Bengal Coal Company, and that one of these forms had actually been printed and the proof corrected by him; that the prisoner had had an intention of making such addition to the printed form as would make it a false document, and that he did this dishonestly and with intent to commit fraud. The sanction was granted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the document bore on its face such marks of concoction that the pleader's suspicions must have been aroused at the first sight of it, and that, had he examined it, as he ought to have done, he would either have rejected it or have advised his client to produce it in Court at his own risk. On appeal to the High Court, Held that the sanction should be revoked. A pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and to justify his prosecution it should be shown that he had been a party (principal or accessory) to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted. A sum of Rs500, which was in the Treasury and was payable to a particular person through a Civil Court, was drawn out and paid away to other persons by means of forged cheques. The prisoner then upon two occasions wrote reports to the effect that the Rs500 in question then stood at the payee's

to Held, with respect to the charge under s 465, that the prisoner's immediate and more probable intention—which alone, and not his remoter and less probable intention, should be attributed to him—was not to cause wrongful loss to the second payee by delaying payment of the Rs500 due to her, though the act might have caused her loss, but to conceal the previous fraudulent withdrawal of the first payee's Rs500, that under these circumstances he could not be said to have acted "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" within the meaning of s 24 or s 25 of the Penal Code, and that therefore his guilt under s 465 had not been made out, and the conviction under that section must be set aside. *QUEEN EMPRESS v. Afterwards the original superior tenure having been sold for arrears of rent under Act VIII of 1835 the father of defendant No. 1 purchased those rights and interests in the name of the defendant and then obtained from the zamundar a pottah and settlement of the talukh as one coming under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. He then fell into arrears, the talukh was sold under the Regulation last cited, and he purchased it benami. Held that the legal inference from these facts was that the conduct of the father of the defendant No. 1 was fraudulent.

The deed was registered its registration being compulsory. It was unaccompanied with possession. In 1882 B obtained possession of the land from the sons of A and sold it to the defendant by a sale deed dated 14th October 1882. This deed was registered and accompanied with possession. In 1883 the plaintiff sued for possession of the land in dispute. Held that the defendant's vendors, by merely omitting to take possession of the land on his purchase, was not guilty of any positive fraud or of any concealment or negligence so gross as to amount to fraud that would entitle the plaintiff to relief against him.

In the case of judgments in rem the same rule holds good with regard to persons who are strangers to the suit. Where a decree has been obtained by the fraud and collusion of both the parties to the suit, it is binding upon the parties. It is also binding upon the privies of the parties, except probably where the collusive fraud has been on a provision of the law enacted for the benefit of such privies. But persons represented by, but not claiming through, the parties to the suit may, in any subsequent proceeding, whether as plaintiff or defendant, treat the previous judgment so obtained by fraud and collusion as a mere nullity, provided the fraud and collusion be clearly established. This was done with the object of protecting the property against the claims of the plaintiff's creditors. The plaintiff occupied the house, ostensibly as tenant to the defendant for a nominal rent. In 1880 the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff to recover possession of the house, and obtained an ex-parte decree. He applied for execution of the decree, but allowed the execution-proceedings to drop. In 1883 he made a fresh application for execution. Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit for a declaration of his title to the house in question, and of his right to retain possession, alleging that the defendant was a mere benamidar; that the sale-deed and the ex-parte decree were sham and collusive transactions in fraud of the plaintiff's creditors; and that the defendant was merely a trustee for him. Held that the plaintiff was bound by the decree passed in 1880 in the defendant's favour, though it was a collusive decree. The plaintiff could not get the judgment set aside which the defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held in trust for him, the object of that trust being to protect the plaintiff's property in fraud of his creditors. Even if such a trust enforceable by the Courts could arise out of such a turpis causa, the question was whether this continued to subsist and would be enforced, when the original relations of the parties had become merged in the decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff. The general principle is that where a defendant has suffered a judgment to pass against him, the matter is then placed beyond his control. Held also, upon the general principle of res judicata, that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the question of fraud in the present suit, which he might and ought to have urged in the former litigation. Held further that the suit, if regarded as one for setting aside a decree obtained by fraud, was barred by limitation, such fraud as there was being as well known to the plaintiff in 1880 as in 1883, when the present suit was filed. A party to a collusive decree is bound by it, except possibly when some other

It had been agreed that the defendant should hold the land at the disposal of the plaintiff but he now refused to surrender to him his share. The plaintiff accordingly sued to recover his share of the property and for a declaration that the collusive decree against him and the subsequent proceedings in execution thereof were not binding on him. Held that it is not competent to a party to a collusive decree to seek to have it set aside and that the plaintiff accordingly was not entitled to relief. VARADARAJULU NAIDU v SRINIVASULU NAIDU

(b) and (c), of Bombay Act IV of 1887, with keeping the shed for the purpose of a "common gaming-house." Held that Bombay Act IV of 1887 did not apply to betting. The shed in question was undoubtedly a common betting place, and the instruments used were instruments of betting, but there is no law in India which makes betting illegal. There is a distinction between betting and gaming. There must be a game before there is gaming; and to constitute a game, there must be a contest, and an active participation of certain persons is also necessary. In the present case there was no contest, no players, and no active part taken by the betters who merely watched the falling of rain. Rain-betting is therefore not a game, and the place where it was carried on not a "common gaming-house." QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAROTTAMDAS MOTIRAM

erected a shed containing eleven pedhis or stalls. In the centre of the shed they put up, in a prominent position, a clock for keeping accurate time. The stalls were let out to certain persons, each at the rate of Rs 100 a month. The roofs of several adjoining houses surrounded this place. From one of these roofs rain fell into the place. Numbers of people resorted to this place for the purpose of rain-betting. The rain-bettors staked certain sums of money on the chance whether the rain would fall or would not fall within a certain time. After making the bets, the parties betting would go to one of the stall-keepers, and get him to register the particulars of the bet in a book kept for the purpose, and each deposited with the stall-keeper the amount staked. The bets as to rain falling were determined by persons at the place seeing the rain falling in a stream from such of the roofs of the adjoining houses as had been chosen by the bettors on making the bets, and seeing also the time, by the clock, if there was any doubt as to the time. After the bet was determined, the winner received from the stall-keeper the amount of the stake. Under these circumstances, the accused were charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with committing the offence of keeping a "common gaming-house" under s. 4, cls. (a), (b), and (c), of the Bombay Gambling Act (IV of 1887), as amended by Act I of 1890. On a reference by the Magistrate under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882),—Held that to bring the place in question within the definition of a "common gaming-house" in s. 3 of the Bombay Gaming Act (IV of 1887) as amended by Bombay Act I of 1890, the instrument of gaming or wagering must be in the place itself, either kept there, or brought there and used there, for profit and gain. It is not sufficient that wagers are made in the place upon or by means of some article or other which is outside the place. The roofs of the houses surrounding the place in question could not therefore be regarded as "instruments of gaming, either kept or used therein," within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act. Held also that the word "used" in s. 3 of the Act, as amended by Act I of 1890, must be taken in its ordinary sense, as meaning actually used. Any article which is in fact used as a means of wagering comes within the definition of "an instrument of gaming," even though it may not have been specially devised or intended for that purpose. Held per TELANG, J., that neither the stalls nor the books in which the bets were registered, nor the money staked and deposited with the stall-keeper, were instruments of gaming or wagering. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. express words to the contrary, ghatwali lands held under a lease which neither confirms nor recognizes the pre-existing status of the ghatwals, nor confers on them any right other than that of holding the lands at a fixed rate as long as ghatwal service is required from them, are resumable by the zamindar when that service is no longer required. LEELANUND SINGH v. 9. ————— Power of Commissioner of Revenue—Disqualification.—A Commissioner of Revenue is not warranted by law, on the demise of a ghatwal, in considering the eligibility of rival claimants to the tenure (a perpetual and descendible one), and in rejecting the claims of the natural heir on considerations purely moral,—e.g., his having evinced a want of filial respect and dutiful feeling to his father. LALL DHAREE ROY v. devolve on issue of the body only, and not on heirs generally according to the law which may govern such succession. The word “descendants” therefore in s. 2 of Bengal Regulation XXIX of 1814 is not to be construed in its restricted meaning, but includes the widow of a deceased ghatwal, who may therefore be one of his heirs. Lall Dharee Roy v. Brojo Lall Singh, 10 W. R., 401, and Kustoree Koomaree v. Monohur Deo, W. R., Gap Number (1864), 39, referred to. Where a ghatwali tenure was admittedly impartible and governed by Mitakshara law, and the only heirs were the widow and the brother of the late ghatwal,—Held (it being found on the evidence that the brothers had separated, and that the ghatwali tenure was the exclusive property of the late ghatwal) that his widow was his heiress according to Mitakshara law. Although, according to the decision of the Privy Council in Chintamun Singh v. Nowlukho Koonwari, 1 L. R., 1 Calc., 153 : 13 W. R., P. C., 21, impartible property is not necessarily separate property, yet semble that with reference to the peculiar character of ghatwali tenures as described in Regulation XXIX of 1814 they were intended to be the exclusive property of the ghatwal for the time being and not joint family property in the proper sense of the term. CHHATRADHARI SINGH v. 21. ——— Resumption—Compensation.

In the Khurruckpore ghatwali mehals the profits of the lands, minus the quit-rent paid to the zamindar, represented the remuneration given to the ghatwals for police services. Government illegally resumed those lands, dispensing with the services of the ghatwals, and settled the tenures with the ghatwals at half the rent current in that part of the country. The resumption proceedings having been set aside, it remained to determine to whom and in what proportions Government should refund the half jumma taken by it as rent from the ghatwals during the period of settlement. Held that, inasmuch as the ghatwals rendered no service during the period of settlement, the moiety of the jumma retained by them was ample compensation for any loss they might have sustained, and the zamindar was entitled to receive the whole of the moiety taken by Government, partly as quit-rent due to him and partly as compensation for loss of the ghatwals' services during the continuance of the settlement. *LEELANUND SINGH v. GHATWALI TENURE—concluded.

tenures—Mitakshara law inapplicable to ghatwali tenure—Family custom inapplicable to ghatwali tenure.—A ghatwali tenure in Khurruckpore is transferable if the zamindar assents and accepts the transfer. Such assent and acceptance may be presumed from the fact of the zamindar having made no objections to a transfer for a period of over twelve years, and when such a fact has been found, a Court ought to recognize such a transfer. In a suit brought to recover possession of a ghatwali tenure situated in Khurruckpore which had been brought to sale in execution of a decree against the previous ghatwali and purchased by the defendants, the plaintiffs sought to rely on the Mitakshara law and certain family custom for the purpose of establishing their right. The lower Court, applying such law and custom, found that the tenure was transferable, and that it was joint ancestral property, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for two-thirds of the property, and the defendants a decree for the remaining one-third, holding that to be the extent of the previous ghatwali interest which had been purchased by the defendants. Held on appeal that the decision of the lower Court was erroneous; that in dealing with a ghatwali tenure the Court must have regard to the nature of the tenure itself and to the rules of law laid down in regard to such tenures, and not to any particular school of law or the customs of any particular family; and that a ghatwali, being created for specific purpose, has its own particular incidents, and cannot be subject to any system of law affecting only a particular class or family. ANUNDO RAI v. 39. ————— Ghatwali tenure in Bhagulpore—Ghatwal's right of alienation—Sale of ghatwal's estate in execution of decree against him.—Ghatwali tenures are rendered by their origin and incidents distinct in some particulars from other inheritances, and to them the law of the Mitakshara, to its full extent, is not entirely applicable; yielding in their case to a custom, though only to the extent of the custom proved. On a question whether the sale of a ghatwali tenure in the Kharagpore zamindari, in Bhagulpore, in execution of a decree against the ghatwal, had transferred the inheritance as against the ghatwal's son,—Held, in regard to a proved custom, that the ghatwali was not inalienable, but might be aliened by the ghatwal or sold in execution of a decree against him, if such alienation was assented to by the zamindar, this power of alienation not being limited to the life-interest of the ghatwal for the time being, but forming part of this right and title to the ghatwali. KALI PRASAD v. Where a gift completed by transfer rested on a valid consideration at the time when it was made,—Held that, even assuming that a condition could be afterwards imported into the transaction, and that condition an immoral one, this would not invalidate the gift, the general rule of law being that a gift to which such a condition is attached remains a good gift while the condition is void. A gift of villages was complete, being followed by transfer of possession. 5. ———— Transfer by gift—Failure to prove alleged inequitable advantage taken by donee over donor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16 and 17.—The heir to a share in an ancestral estate, out of possession and at a time when he expected that his right would be contested by another claimant, made a gift of his title to his brother's son, providing that he, the donor, should have nothing to do with the cost of getting possession. After the donee had obtained possession, the donor sued to have the gift set aside. The gift, having been maintained in the first Court, was set aside by the Appellate Court on the ground that, it having been made without consideration and imprudently as regarded the donor's interests, he had had no opportunity to obtain any advice from an independent person, but had only had that advice which came from, or was given on behalf of, the donee. Thus the gift was not an equitable transaction which the Court should enforce. The Appellate Court had, however, affirmed the finding of the first Court, that the donor, with full knowledge of the contents of the deed, had voluntarily executed it, and that he had been apprehensive of incurring costs in litigation in getting possession of his inherited share. Held that the Appellate Court was in error in taking it that the question was whether the transaction was an equitable one which that Court should enforce. The defendant was not asking the Court to enforce the deed; and the reason why the gift was without consideration was explained by the circumstances. The reasons given by the Appellate Court for reversing the decision of the first Court were insufficient. It did not appear that unsound advice was given to the donor by, or on behalf of, the donee, or that confidence was reposed by the donor so as to bring the case within s. 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. There was only the donor's statement that he had confidence, which was not sufficient proof of it. Whether a gift made as this had been should be set aside, as being inequitable between the parties, would depend on the circumstances existing at the time of the gift, and not on subsequent events. *GANGA BAKSH v. 4 ——— Gift of Government promissory notes—Necessity of endorsement—Intention—The plaintiffs, M and B, were Parsis, and were married in the year 1851. The defendant was the widow of B M, who was the father of the plaintiff B. The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendant certain Government promissory notes which they alleged had been presented by B, to M at her marriage for her sole and separate use. They alleged that the said notes then of the nominal value of Rs. 1,500, were endorsed in the name of the said B and had been deposited by him for safe custody with M's grand father J that the said B during his life used from time to time to receive the said notes from J, and draw the interest thereon for M, that B died in 1864, and that after his death the defendant who was his widow and executrix, used to draw the interest for M, that in 1869 she obtained possession of the said notes, and before the present suit, and, having then separated from her had called upon her to hand over the notes and the accumulated interest, which she refused to do. The defendant denied that her husband B had presented M with Government notes for her separate use. She alleged that the notes which had been deposited by B with J were her own separate property, and not M's, that she and her husband had dealt from time to time with them, and that no interest was ever paid to the plaintiffs or either of them or for their benefit. She further stated that some of the notes which had been deposited with J had been disposed of by B in his lifetime with her consent, that in 1869 she obtained the remaining notes from J and sold them, and applied the proceeds to her own benefit.

the family of her husband. The latter account contained an entry (under date August 1854) to the effect that the father-in-law of M had bought two Government notes for Rs. 1,500 in M's name, and had obtained the interest on them which was duly credited to her. Other documents were produced, proved to be in the handwriting of B and J, in which the said Government notes were alluded to as the property of M and as having been purchased with her moneys. In 1864 B died without having endorsed the notes over to M or to any one in her behalf, and they remained in his name in the hands of J until 1869, when the defendant got possession of Wrongful dismissal of public servant, Suit against Government for—Contract of service—Public servant—Payment of monthly wages.—A suit for wrongful dismissal by one of its servants will lie against the Government. In a suit by a subordinate officer in the Public Works Department for wrongful dismissal against the Government, in which it was admitted that there was no time of service fixed, and in which the plaintiff put in a memorandum of agreement between himself and the Government, stipulating that he should give six months' notice of his intention to leave the service of the Government,—Held that the hiring was indefinite; and that, although the plaintiff had bound himself to give six months' notice prior to leaving their service, there was no corresponding obligation on the Government to give notice before dismissing him. The Government, however, would not be allowed to exercise this power capriciously, or to the damage of the servant. An indefinite hiring in India does not mean a hiring for a year. The mere payment of wages monthly is not enough to show that a hiring is a monthly hiring. HUGHES v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL . 7 B. L. R., 688

1. —Renewal of note—Loss of negotiability by note becoming covered with endorsements—“Allonge.”—In a suit by a Hindu widow as the holder and last endorsee of a Government promissory note of the 5½ per cent. loan, 1859-60, to enforce renewal of the note, it appeared that in the advertisement of the loan in the Gazette, it was stated that “the practice and rules heretofore in use in regard to the renewal, etc., of promissory notes will be adhered to in respect of the promissory notes of this loan;” that it was the practice of the Government to insist on the production of the promissory note when the interest due on it was applied for, and to endorse the payment of such interest on the back of the note; that the note of which renewal was sought had in consequence become so covered with endorsements that a slip of paper had been attached to it by the Government for the purpose of allowing further endorsements on payment of interest to be made; and that in consequence of having this paper attached, and being covered with endorsements, the note was practically unnegotiable. The defence was that the Government had a discretion as to granting or refusing renewal, and had, on objection made by the reversioners, exercised that discretion in refusing to renew the note. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show any legal right to renewal against the Government. Held on appeal that the practice of insisting on endorsement of payments of interest on the note as a preliminary to receipt of interest thereon having rendered it practically unnegotiable, the Government were bound to renew the note. *MONMOHINEE DEBI v. 2. —Theft of note—Purchaser, Rights of—Title.—In the month of October 1878, a Government promissory note for Rs10,000 was sent from the A treasury to the Public Debt Office for encasement. The note was duly received at the office, and its receipt was entered in the proper book. The business of the Public Debt Office is carried on by certain officers of the B Bank. The note was stolen from the office, and endorsed over by the thief to a person who sold it to C for full value. The note bore two blank endorsements prior to that of the thief. In the same month C applied to the B Bank for a loan, which the Bank agreed to make upon the security of C's promissory note, and the deposit of Government notes. The form of application for the loan specified by their numbers the notes which were to be deposited. One of these was the stolen note. Before finally agreeing to the advance, the officers of the Bank in charge of the Loan Department sent the application, showing the numbers of the notes to the Public Debt Office, and received it back with a memorandum upon it to the effect that the notes were not stopped. On the 23rd October the loan was made, and the securities were given. Shortly afterwards the theft was discovered and the note was stopped. In November the Bank, at the request of C, sent the note to the Public Debt Office for payment of interest, and the note was detained by the Superintendent. The Bank then required C to repay the amount of his loan. This he refused to do unless all his securities were handed over to him. In a suit by the Bank against C upon his promissory note,—Held that he was not entitled to refuse payment until the stolen note was given up to him. Per GARTH, C.J.—The Public Debt Branch of the B Bank is as much a Government office as if it were carried on separately under the management of Government officers. The note was therefore stolen whilst virtually in the hands of the Government, and was, when detained by the Superintendent of the Public Debt Office, held by him as the agent of the Government on behalf of the true owner at the time when it was stolen, and the Bank had no right or power to take it in their private capacity out of the hands of the Public Debt Office. When an instrument, such as the note in question, has been stolen, the person from whom it was stolen has a good title to it, not only as against the thief, but as against any person who subsequently becomes the holder, unless such person can prove that the instrument had become negotiable at the time it was stolen, and that he had obtained it bona fide for value without notice of the theft. In this case the note was stolen whilst in the custody of the Public Debt Office before C had any title to it. The Bank, therefore, as agents for the

VII of 1822, s 7, cl 1—Acquiescence—Acceptance of rent after term of settlement—Presumption of due performance of official acts—The plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for India in Council for the declaration that a certain noabad mehal of his in the district of Chittagong was a permanent talukh, not resumable by the Government. He based his claim on two grounds—(1) that the mehal existed from before the time of the Decennial Settlement, and the settlement of 1800 confirmed the permanent right of the talukhdar in the same, and (2) that, at any rate, a kabuliat executed in 1836 by his predecessors in title with the approval of the Collector had the same effect. In defence, it was alleged (1) that the mehal was not in existence at the time of the Decennial Settlement, and the settlement of 1800 was a temporary one, and (2) that the kabuliat was never accepted by the Government, but that, on the contrary, the Government passed distinct orders that the settlements of 1836 were for thirty years only, which order was duly published by an istahar to that effect. It was found on the evidence that the talukh was not shown to have been in existence before 1800, and the settlement proceedings of that year and the variation of rent from time to time did not support the plaintiff's contention. Held that the kabuliat of 1836 was merely an offer on the part of the talukhdar for the time being and was not binding on the Government, its terms not having been accepted either by the Government or by any duly authorized officer thereof, that both by law and by the special instructions issued for the guidance of settlement officers, no settlement could be binding on the Government unless confirmed by the Governor-General in Council. There being no proof given by either party as to whether the istahar above-mentioned was or was not duly published,—Held that the publication of the istahar must be presumed, having regard to the presumption in favour of the due performance of official acts. Held also that, even conduct of the officers was in violation of their duty as such officers and in direct contravention of the express orders of the Government. Held also that

Words of inheritance are neither necessary nor customary in such cases, and no inference is to be drawn from their absence. GUNGA DEEN v. LUCHMUN PERSHAD

3. ——— Proof of hereditary nature of grant.—The absence of words of inheritance in a deed of grant of land is not of itself conclusive to show that such grant was not intended to be in perpetuity; but the hereditary character of the tenure may be inferred from evidence of long and uninterrupted enjoyment, and of the descent of the tenure from father to son. Held that the grant in this case was not for the benefit of the family, but was confirmed to the grantee's son only. The family could have no other claim upon him than a natural obligation to help them, and their title to succeed to the grant could only accrue in regular succession. BITHUL BHAT v. Those of the defendants who had purchased the Government promissory notes contended that as innocent purchasers for value they were entitled to retain them. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover all the shares debentures and Government promissory notes from the defendants. Some of the Government promissory notes on which the forged endorsements had been made had been surrendered for renewal and fresh promissory notes issued in their place. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the renewed notes from the holders. HUNDESI PURMANAND v. 14. ——— Limited grant—Prescriptive right of inamdars to recover from shilatriddars the revenue formerly paid by latter to Government.—Government, by an indenture, dated 25th January 1819, conveyed to A and B and their heirs and assigns certain villages in the Island of Salsette with the exception of such spots of shilatri tenure as might be therein or on any part thereof which could only become the property of A and B on their purchasing the same from the proprietors. Since 1819 the holders of these shilatri lands had paid to the grantees and their heirs assessment (or rent) at a fixed rate which before the grant they used to pay to Government. In a suit brought by an heir of A and B in 1868 to recover an enhanced rent or assessment levied on these lands,—Held that, though the language of the exception was so large that it might have been construed to exclude any right on the part of the grantees to receive rent (or revenue), yet that, as the defendant or his predecessors had, ever since 1819, paid to the plaintiff and his predecessors the revenue paid before that time to Government, that revenue passed under the indenture of 1819 to the grantees in the deed. DADABHAI JAHANGIRJI v. 15. ——— Grant of mortgaged villages—Provision for grant of others in case of redemption—Implied confirmation of father's grant by son.—In 1846 A granted a pottah of a certain village, which had been mortgaged to him, to his illegitimate son B, promising, in the event of the mortgagor redeeming the estate, to make over to B, in lieu of the village granted, other villages yielding an equal revenue, and in 1847 confirmed the grant making it rent-free. On A's death, the grant made by him was confirmed by his legitimate son, the appellant, in certain pottahs, in which, however, no reference was made to the provision in the earlier grant by the father for the substitution, in the event of the mortgagor redeeming, of villages yielding an equal revenue. After the passing of Act XIII of 1866, the mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption and ousted B. Held by the Privy Council that the appellant was bound by his father's agreement in the pottah of 1846 to make over to B villages yielding a revenue equal to that of the village which had been redeemed. BIJAI BAHADOOR SINGH v. 17. ——— Grant by zamindar—Mad. Reg. XXV, 1802, s. 3—Inam—Tenancy not determinable at will of grantor's successor.—Regulation XXV of 1802, s. 3, imposes restrictions on alienations only to secure the interests of the public revenue, and under it the zamindar has no power to disturb grants otherwise valid made by his predecessor or titles to inams acquired by prescription. An inam, existing under a grant made in 1811, became in 1863 the subject of arrangement between the zamindar, who had succeeded the grantor in the zamindari, and the inamdars. This resulted in what was either a confirmation of the original grant on terms more favourable to the zamindar, or a new grant of an estate in all respects, save as to the rent, similar to the previously existing estate, which was a tenancy in perpetuity. Subsequently the son and successor of the grantor of 1863 claimed to have determined the tenancy by a notice to quit. Held that it was not determinable by such notice. MAHARAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM v. It is for the Government to determine how saranjams are to be held and allotted, and in cases where the Civil Courts have been asked to over claims relating to saranjams, in consequence of the non-applicability of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871, or otherwise they would be bound to determine such claims according to the rules applicable to such

This palayam was not brought under Permanent Settlement under the provisions of Regulation XXV of 1802. The last male holder died in 1860 leaving him surviving a widow K and a daughter C. In 1865 the Government discontinued the service and, in lieu thereof and of the reversionary interest of the Crown, imposed a quit-rent, and an inam pottah was issued to K by the Inam Commissioner by which her title to the estate was acknowledged by the Government of Madras, and the estate was confirmed to her as her absolute property subject to the quit-rent. Held that the effect of the inam pottah was not to confer on K any new estate, but merely as between the Crown and the owners of the estate to release the reversionary right of the Crown. *NARAYANA v. 27. ——— Grant of profits of vatan deshmukhi in perpetuity—Hereditary gomastahs—How far such grant valid after the death of the grantor.—By a sanad duly executed on the 20th August 1850, the plaintiff's father, Y, who was a vatandar deshmukh, appointed the defendants and their heirs hereditary vatani gomastahs, and granted, by way of remuneration for their services, Rs 201 and a quantity of grain out of the annual vatan income in perpetuity. In consideration of certain sums obtained from the defendants, Y mortgaged the vatan property to the defendants, who subsequently sued Y upon the mortgage. The suit was referred to arbitration, and an award was duly made, and a decree upon the award was obtained by the defendants against Y. In 1859 execution of the decree was granted against Y. In 1864 the services connected with the vatan were discontinued by Government. In 1871 Y died. The defendants, having kept the decree alive, sought in 1881 to execute the decree against the plaintiff's eldest brother, who filed objections, but his objections were overruled, and execution was ordered to issue. The plaintiffs brought this suit in 1883 for a declaration that the defendants were no longer entitled to the allowance under the sanad, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from the execution of the decree against the vatan. The defendants contended (inter alia) that the sanad could not be cancelled, Y having granted it as full owner, and that the receipt by the defendants of the allowance had been adverse since 1864, when their services had ceased. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Courts, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaratory decree and to the injunction prayed for. Although the management of the vatan was vested by the sanad in the defendants and their heirs in perpetuity under the title of gomastahs, nevertheless the remuneration attached to the office by Y was in derogation of his successor's rights, and was therefore, at any rate in the absence of proof of custom, invalid against them. Held also that, having regard to the terms of the sanad, it was in the power of the original grantor or any of his successors to determine the office and the remuneration at any time after the vatan services ceased in 1864. KRISNAJI v. VITHALRAV . . . I. L. R., 12 Bom., 80

28. ——— Proprietary right of khot to khoti vatani land—Right of such khot to forest land and to timber and wood growing thereon—Government, Right of, to appropriate forest preserves, assessed or unassessed land—Construction of such khoti grants.—The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging that the village of mouzah Ambedu, in the Ratnagiri District, was his khoti vatani village in which his proprietary right extended to raise crops of any kind or to preserve and cut the jungle and forest trees on the lands therein. He complained that since 1855-56 the Collector of the district had prohibited him from exercising the above alleged rights, and prayed that the obstruction might be removed and Rs 600 awarded as damages. The plaintiff based his claim mainly on the settlement of 1788, Dunlop's proclamation of 1824, and several other khoti grants in the district. The defendant denied that the plaintiff had any proprietary right in the village, and contended (inter alia) that the khot derived his rights from the yearly kabuliats passed by him, that his right to cultivate did not extend to cultivating the jungle land, and that his position was no better than that of a Patel. The joint Judge who tried the suit held that under the settlement of 1788 the plaintiff as khot was entitled to the jungle produce, except timber; that in virtue of Dunlop's proclamation of 1824 the plaintiff acquired an unqualified right to the forest land in the village and timber growing on it, and that the defendant had no right to appropriate assessed or unassessed land for forest purposes, and awarded the plaintiff the sum of Rs 600 as damages. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, Held that the application of the general rules of construction of grants to a subject by the State requires that language of such general import as is ordinarily to be found in the khot's sanads should be taken most beneficially to the State. Held accordingly that, in the absence of a sanad expressly granting it, the ownership neither of the soil nor of cultivated or uncultivated lands passes by the grant of the vatandari khotship. Held also that the grant of the vatani khoti did not make the khot a perpetual tenant of Government in respect of all lands in the village, except dhara lands. Held on the authority of *Tajubai v. some from the Collector and the rest from the Superintendent of Survey; that under his kabuliats he was entitled to take up the lands direct from Government, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to the assessment due on the lands which he had refused to accept. Lastly, the defendant denied that he had acted in fraud of the plaintiff's rights in acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. Held on the construction of the sanad that, the plaintiff being the khot of the whole of the village exclusive of the land granted in inam, the maphi istava lands were included in the khoti grant; that the khot's interest in them, whatever might be the extent of it, was not separable from the khoti estate; and that the khot had a reversionary interest in the maphi istava lands as well as in the suti lands which had been abandoned by their former occupants. Held also that the defendant was not precluded by the terms of his lease from acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. The engagement to furnish accounts of the balance of the village revenue at the end of each year was simply an engagement to furnish the plaintiff with information which would be of use to him, and which indeed it would be necessary for him to possess when he resumed the management of the village on the determination of the lease. It imported nothing more than that; and the whole transaction evidenced by the kabuliats was merely an assignment in consideration of a fixed annual payment to be made by defendant to plaintiff, of the rights and liabilities of the latter to be exercised and discharged for a certain period by the former. For that period the defendant was the maktadar or tenant of the plaintiff's khotship; and though a certain confidence was necessarily reposed in him in connection with a tenancy of this nature, and though he was bound jealously and scrupulously to protect the plaintiff's interests, so far as they were in his keeping, yet he was not bound by the strict rule which prohibits a trustee from acquiring for himself an estate of his cestui que trust. Under clause 7th of the kabuliats of 1858, the defendant was at liberty either to take up waste lands himself or put in tenants; if he put in tenants on leases, the special advantages of any leases were to expire with his own lease. But the actual occupation of land either by himself or by his tenants was not to be interfered with at the determination of his lease, so long as he or they continued to pay the assessment according to the practice of the village. The defendant could therefore, without the intervention of the Collector, have taken up the maphi istava lands in suit and become himself the tenant; and he could have also acquired the suti lands from former sutidars, or taken them up if waste, without the intervention of the Survey Superintendent. The circumstance that when acquiring the lands he needlessly invoked the assistance of the revenue authorities would not invalidate his title if it could not be impugned on other grounds. Held further that the defendant was not guilty of fraud, as there was no evidence to show that he had acted in a surreptitious or secret manner in acquiring the lands in suit. On the contrary, his action in applying to the revenue authorities was a sign of his

31. ——— Invalidity of grant, or covenant by grantor, in favour of person unborn upon a condition which may never arise—Restraint upon grantor's own power of alienating—Hindu law.—The purpose of a grant was to oblige the grantor and his successors in a raj estate to give in some way or other maintenance to all the descendants of four persons living at the date of the grant, by declaring that, on the failure of the raja of the day at any future time to maintain such descendants, the latter were to have an immediate right to four of the raj villages. This might be regarded as imparting a present assignment to persons not yet in existence, subject to a suspensive condition, which might prevent its ever taking effect; or it might be regarded as a covenant intended to run with the raj estate, in favour of non-existing covenantees, to give the villages to them in the event specified. Held that in either view it was equally ineffectual. Held also that the High Court had correctly construed the instrument in holding that the words "If ever in the time of my descendants you are not provided with means of maintenance" formed a condition which also was unfulfilled—the descendants being in possession of villages granted to them by the raja, other than those claimed, more than sufficient for their maintenance. CHANDI CHURN BARUA v. The deed of settlement then went on to provide that, if at any time the heirs of the settlor, or whoever might be in possession of the rest of his estate, should demand from R, or the person in possession of the lands assigned to her, the revenue assessed on those lands, then R and her heirs would be entitled to claim and take possession of the legal share in the settlor's estate to which she would be entitled under the Mahomedan law of inheritance. Held that, as regards a person who had acquired a portion of the settled property partly by private sale and partly by sale at auction, the settlement contravened the provisions of s. 6 of Regulation No. XXXI of 1803, and the heirs of the settlor could not be compelled to pay the land revenue due on the portion of the settled lands acquired by the said purchaser, nor had the purchaser any right under the deed of settlement to a proportionate part of the inheritance which would have come to Rahmat-un-nissa from her father. SAHIB ALI v. The grantee had, however, already executed a pottah, described therein as permanent, to a lessee. The latter obtained possession, and from him after the death of the original grantee for life the zamindars who succeeded the grantor accepted rent at the rate stipulated in the pottah, and did not disturb his possession. the life of the grantee, the pottah was void as against the successor in title of the grantor, and not merely voidable after the grantee's death. The acceptance of rent at the rate in the pottah could not have the effect of confirming it in its entirety, which, according to the construction of the High Court, would have been for a permanent estate. The duration of the pottah could not exceed that of the original grant; nor could an admission, taken by the High Court to have been that the acceptance of rent had confirmed the permanency of the lease, preclude the claim for legal rights, even supposing that admission to have been made. The matter in contest was as to the circumstances under which the lessee was allowed to remain in possession and their legal effect. And on the evidence, the lessee had been allowed to remain as a mokurari tenant for his life. (2) The suit for possession was not barred under article 91 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) on the ground that a decree declaratory of title to have the pottah cancelled might have been sued for in the lessee's lifetime under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. Secondary evidence of lost grant by Government.—In a suit to declare the plaintiff's title to a shrotrium village which was included in the jaghir granted in 1763 by the Nawab of the Carnatic to the East India Company, it appeared that the village in question had been previously granted by the Nawab free of assessment to the Kazi of Madras as an endowment for his office, and afterwards to the son of the first grantee personally, without condition of service. In 1779 the British Government confirmed the village in perpetuity to the second grantee on account of the office of Kazi which he filled, and to his direct heirs who should be fit for that office. In 1862 on failure of the direct male line, the grantee's grandson by a daughter was nominated to the office of Kazi with the approval of Government, who directed he should hold the village, adding that it had been assigned as an endowment for that office. In the same years the Inam Commissioner confirmed it as a personal inam, enfranchised it and granted a title-deed to the holder. In 1866 Government ordered that the village should be registered as an endowment of the Kazi-ship and the title-deed cancelled, and in 1868 notified in the Gazette that the title-deed which was not produced was cancelled. Between the dates of the above order and notification the Kazi transferred the village to the plaintiff under a deed of perpetual lease and placed him in possession. But in 1873 Government resumed the village and subsequently directed that the whole of its net revenue be paid to the Kazi. The Kazi from whom the plaintiff claimed died in 1868. An inam of certain menkaval lands, which had formerly been allotted to the village watchman as inam, had been granted to the Kazi in 1802-3; they were cultivated by raiyats who paid varan to the inamdar. The order of resumption in 1873 had no reference to these lands, but in 1877 Government issued pottahs to the raiyats. Held (1) that the grant of 1779, the original document not having been produced by the plaintiff, was sufficiently proved by a translation produced from official custody and certified by the Collector in 1838 to be correct and attested by the Persian translator to Government; (2) that it was competent for the Government in 1779 to alter the nature of the grant of 1761 as an act of State; (3) that on the right construction of Regulation IV of 1831 and Act IV of 1862, and in view of the facts that the plaintiff must have been aware of the nature of the tenure and of the contents of the grant of 1779 and the cancellation of the inam title-deed, the Government were not acting ultra vires in cancelling the enfranchisement, etc.; (4) that the Kazi through whom the plaintiff claimed having died in 1868, there was no reason to question the resumption in 1873; (5) that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the menkaval lands, the action of Government in issuing pottahs to the raiyats being ultra vires. Issues first framed on appeal as to the plaintiff's claim to mirasi rights and menkaval lands. Evidence of mirasi rights considered. KARUNAKARA MENON v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

The charterers to have the option of cancelling their charter party in the event of the vessel arriving at Rangoon in a disabled state, and the time for repairs to make the ship seaworthy in every respect exceeding twenty-five days. Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, the estimated amount of freight." The plaintiffs were acting on behalf of N B, and the defendants on behalf of C during the whole of this negotiation, and C was at the time largely indebted to N B. The ship Caroline turned out to be unseaworthy, and the charter party was not carried out. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants on the guarantee,—Held that the covenant to transfer the mortgage of the Moulmein was independent, and not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action. Held also on the facts that the representation in the charter party that the Caroline was, while lying at Bombay, "tight, strong, and staunch," etc., amounted to a contract that the ship should be so, and the defendants' guarantee covered it. Held also that the defendants, not being parties to the charter party and not having bound themselves to any assessment of damages, were not called on to pay the penalty specified in the last clause of the charter-party, but that the damages against them must be the actual damages which the plaintiffs on N B's behalf suffered in consequence of C's breach of contract,—that is, Rs21,500 paid under the contract, and the balance of freight that would have gone to reduce N B's debt and interest on both sums from the date of the contract. The plaintiffs, however, claimed a less sum than these damages would amount to, and therefore the plaintiff's claim was decreed in full. PRESTOMJEE DHUNJEEBHAY v. GREGORY

Act (XL of 1858) does not imply that a sale or mortgage or a lease for more than five years, executed by a certificated guardian without the sanction of the Civil Court, is illegal and void ab initio; but the proviso means that in the absence of such sanction the certificated guardian, who otherwise would have all the powers which the minor would have if he were of age, shall be relegated to the position which he would occupy if he had been granted no certificate at all. If any one chooses to take a mortgage or a lease for a term exceeding five years under these circumstances, the transaction is on the basis of no certificate having been granted. In a suit brought by the guardian of a Mahomedan minor for a declaration that a mortgage-deed executed by the minor's mother was null and void to the extent of the minor's share and for partition and possession of such share, it was found that a considerable proportion of the moneys received by the mortgagor had been applied for the benefit of the minor's estate by discharging incumbrances imposed on it by his deceased father. It appeared that at the time of the mortgage the mother held a certificate of guardianship under the Bengal Minors Act, and that she had not obtained from the Civil Court any order sanctioning the mortgage under s. 18 of that Act. Held that the omission to obtain such sanction did not make the mortgage illegal or void ab initio, but relegated the parties to the position in which they would have been if no certificate had been granted, i.e., that of a transaction by a Mahomedan mother affecting to mortgage the property of her minor son, with whose estate she had no power to interfere. Held that this fell within the class of cases in which it has been decided that if a person sells or mortgages another's property having no legal or equitable right to do so, and that other benefits by the transaction, the latter cannot have it set aside without making restitution to the person whose money has been applied for the benefit of the estate. Held that, even if mortgages executed by a certificated guardian without the sanction required by s. 18 of the Bengal Minors Act were void, the section did not make them illegal; and, with reference to s. 65 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff could not obtain a decree for a declaration that the mortgage was inoperative as against his share, except on condition of his making restitution to the extent of any moneys advanced by the defendant under the mortgage-deed which had gone to the benefit of the plaintiff's estate, or had been expended on his maintenance, education, or marriage. *Mauji Ram v. On a question whether, there being no proof of the necessity or expediency of agreeing to pay interest at a rate so high as eighteen per cent., the agreement to pay at this rate was rightly set aside by the High Court, which decreed interest at twelve per cent.,—Held that the proper construction of the order, and the one most favourable to the lender regarding the rate of interest, was that the guardian was authorized to borrow only at a reasonable rate of interest, and that consequently the decree of the High Court was right. GANGAPERSHAD SAHU v. It appeared that no formalities had been observed in coming to the partition, and no record preserved of the proceedings except a list representing the result arrived at; that the division was effected simply on reference to a thakbust map, an average rental per bigha taken as the basis thereof, and a number of bighas allotted in proportion to each individual's share. None of the ordinary precautions were taken for the protection of the interest of minors. Held that the partition was not made in such way, and under such circumstances as to be in itself obligatory on the minor, who had the option of repudiating it when he came of age or within a reasonable period after that date. Held also that the minor could only be held to have accepted the partition if he had acted in such a way to the plaintiffs as to lead them naturally to suppose that he had done so. KALEE SUNKUR SANNYAL v. 82. Suit on bond executed by mother for debts which son, then a minor, might be liable to pay.—A bond executed by a widow in possession of a zamindari was held binding on the adopted son of the late zamindar, the inference from the evidence being that the bond was given for debts which the defendant (the adopted son) as owner of the zamindari might be liable to pay, and that by his own acts he had admitted that he actually was liable to the payment. CHITTY COURT COOMAR VEN- OOTACHETA KADAYAR v. RUVAGASAWER IYENGAR [4 W. R., P. C., 71; 8 MOORE'S I. A., 319

83. Necessity for

borrowing—Mortgage by de facto guardian or manager without de jure title.—Under the Hindu law, the right of a bond fide encumbrancer who has taken from a de facto guardian or manager a charge on lands created honestly for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. Under the Hindu law, the power of a manager for an infant heir to charge an ancestral estate is a limited and qualified one, to be exercised in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. Where the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bond fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan, and to satisfy himself that the manager is acting for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so enquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. The mere creation of a charge by a manager, securing a proper debt, cannot be viewed as improvident management; and a bond fide creditor should not suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived. 84. De facto manager—

Sale by a de facto manager of minor's property for legal necessity and for his benefit, whether valid.—A de facto manager of an infant's estate has, in case of necessity or for the benefit of the minor, power to sell his property. 85. Alienation made by guardian—Suit to set aside.—A suit brought by a Hindu widow as guardian of her minor child, to set aside alienations made by her late husband, the minor's father, is governed by the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Girdhare Lal v. Kan- too Lal, 14 B. L. R., 187; 23 W. R., 56, viz., that miss was alleged to have been entered into by a mother and on behalf of her two minor sons on the one hand and an adult member of the family on the other, agreeing to give the latter more than had been awarded by a judicial decision, it was held that the compromise was not binding on the minors. Apparent misgivings in such a compromise by one of the minors is after arriving at majority, though evidence against him, is not evidence of a conclusive character when not continued for any considerable time.

191. Ratification by acquisition—Minnesota, Contract by A used in 1885 the defendant's predecessor in title who died in 1883, having been in possession of the estate since 1867. The plaintiff alleged that, whether the cause of action arose in 1808 or 1807, it was equally barred from 1819, that the plaintiff was a joint owner of the land, assuming the plaintiff was a joint owner of 15 years of age at the date of the deed to Kington. It is not likely he would not have understood the effect or that he failed to ascertain it. He was not the intended beneficiary of the deed, in the absence, moreover, of the deed to be made to him. It is not possible to say that the defendant was not intended to be a party to the deed.

B having been granted by a District Court a certificate under Act XI of 1858 in respect of the estate of a minor, the Judge of such Court called on her to furnish security, and certain persons accordingly gave security bonds to the Judge on her behalf. Subsequently B's certificate was taken from her, and was granted to A, who brought a suit in the minor's behalf against B's sureties for the value of the property entrusted to B. The security bonds in question were not assigned by the Judge to A. Held that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was seeking to enforce contracts which were never made with him or any other person in the character of legal representative of the minor, he had no legal status to maintain the suit. Also that no equitable rights were created in the minor by the bonds, which would render the suit maintainable. Quare—Whether the Judge of a District Court is competent to call upon a person to whom he grants a certificate under Act XI of 1858 to furnish security; and whether, where he has done so and security-bonds have been given to him, he can assign them in the manner provided in s. 257 of the Succession Act, 1865. *Asian Nath v. *Derivation of his title such that the desmukh could not dismiss him—Sandak, Construction of—As to paid office of hereditary gomastah, dismissed the holder of the in the vatan of the former, the desmukhi allowances from the villages, it was shown by documentary evidence that the gomastah's ancestor had been appointed by the ruling power of the day, from which authority also the desmukhi had been derived. It was also shown that the hereditary gomastah's title was independent of the desmukhi, and that the latter could not displace him. No change had been made under the British rule from what had preceded as there was, accorded with the above. Held that the right of the gomastah to act as such and to receive the payments had either been granted or else had been so recognized and confirmed by an authority binding on the desmukhi that he could not deprive the gomastah of his office, which the Government had conferred upon him; and that the desmukh had not the right, as against him, to collect the allowances himself directly, either from the village officers or from the treasury. *Rakomandras Narsingh v. The children's widow of a vatanar, deceased in 1847, was the recognized vatanar in possession in 1865. She mortgaged two villages of the vatan to the father of the respondent in 1886, by order of the Commissioner, retained possession in Department, until there should be a decree of Court to the contrary. The widow, according to her judgment below, had held the vatan adversely to her late husband's son, the plaintiff, who was born in 1848 of her co-widow, and he was the true heir, entitled from his birth. But the High Court gave effect to the adverse possession of the widow for the period of limitation supporting the mortgage. The plaintiff was the sole heir of the widow, his step-mother, who died in 1877. The appellant contended that the vatan, as inherited by him, was free from the mortgage encumbrance, and that he was entitled to possession. Held, reversing the decree of the High Court, that the mortgage was void against the heir, and had no force beyond the life of the vatanar who had executed it. The decree of the Subordinate Judge to that effect and for possession was maintained. Padava v. Swamirao Shrinivas presented a petition of complaint to the Sub-Collector of B, who issued an order, on the 10th November 1880, to the Magistrate directing him to require the parties to refer their dispute to arbitration. The arbitration took place, and on the 20th August 1881 both parties executed a rajmanam (Exhibit No 20), which set forth the terms of settlement. The parties agreed upon the mortgage of the lands and rusam (annual allowance) for fifty years. At the end of that period the principal debt and all interest thereon was to be deemed to have been paid off, and the lands and rusam were to be surrendered to the mortgagee or his heir. Under this rajmanam, the mortgagee held uninterrupted possession of the mortgage property until A D 1872, A, one of the signatories of the rajmanam, and H again was succeeded by the present plaintiff, who in 1872 brought this suit against the defendant (H) to recover possession of the mortgage property. The Subordinate Judge held that the rajmanam of A D 1881 being an alienation of rusam property after the passing of Regulation XVI of 1847, a 20, was invalid as against the mortgagee for the grantor. He therefore made a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal the Assistant

Removal of attachment made by Civil Court.—The application held a decree, dated the 23rd June 1861, against Ismail Ali Khan and another for Rs. 3,956-13-7, of which he had already recovered Rs. 2,742-4-5. On the 24th December 1866, he applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Pen for the attachment of the proceeds of a certain vatan, belonging to the judgment-debtors, in satisfaction of the balance of Rs. 214-9-2 due to him, and under his decree, on the 7th February 1868, the Court attached the proceeds by a prohibitory order to the Mamlatdar of Pen. While this attachment was pending, the Collector, on the 13th December 1878, sent a certificate to the Court, and informed it that the proceeds of the vatan were not liable to attachment under ss. 10 and 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. The certificate referred to the profits of the vatan which had accrued due before the passing of the Act, and also to those which had been subsequently assigned by the Collector as remuneration of the official. The Court, on receiving it, removed the attachment and dismissed the application on the 11th January 1879. The order was affirmed in appeal. On an application to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, Held that the Collector was authorized, by the first part of s. 10 of the Vatan-dar's Act, to inform the Court by his certificate that a portion of the profits attached had been assigned by him as remuneration to the official, and that the Court was bound, on receiving it, to remove the pending attachment. Held also that the arrears due at the date of the Act, and which had not been assigned, fell within the latter part of the section. The High Court accordingly dismissed the application with costs. JAGJIVAN v. ISMAIL ALI KHAN [I. L. R., 4 Bom., 426]

Under this deed these properties were to be held by Rudrap in lieu of interest until repayment of the principal of Rs. 20,000. The plaintiff sued as purchaser at a Court sale of the interest of defendant No. 1, to redeem and recover possession of the land in dispute, alleging that it had been mortgaged by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 1 denied the mortgage, and that he had any title to the land, which he said belonged to R and formed a part of R's deshmukhi vatan. R having died, leaving a minor widow, sued as defendant No. 4 in the suit, the estate was administered by the Collector. On the application of the minor's personal guardian, the Collector was joined as a party. The Collector had also certified to the Court, under s. 10 of Act III of 1874, that the land formed part of a vatan. The District Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim and ordered the sale to be set aside. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, Held, following Shankar Gopal v. Babaji Lakshman, I. L. R., 12 Bom., 550, that the Judge ought not to have acted on the certificate by setting the sale aside. Ss. 9 and 10 of Act III of 1874 were not applicable to the case, as the first defendant, whose interest was purchased by the plaintiff, was not a vatan-dar. *BHAV BAPPA v. When the Vatan Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) came into operation, no order as regards remuneration was made, but the plaintiff, subject to objection, was appointed to officiate. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to effect the alienation. Held that the lease to the defendant as a partial alienation was invalid under Regulation XVI of 1827, s. 20; that the invalidity thereof was not removed by the Collector not being called upon to declare it to be null and void under s. 9, cl. 1, of Bombay Act III of 1874; and that the plaintiff as life-owner was entitled to possession. *PURSHOTAM TALWAR v. Representative vatanadar—Attachment—Jurisdiction of Revenue and Civil Courts—Res judicata.

A decree of the District Court in Solapur, made in 1863, declared the plaintiff to be an hereditary deputy vatanadar of a certain disjunctive vatan vested in the defendants as hereditary vatanis; and as such deputy entitled to receive a certain sum annually out of the income of the vatan. The plaintiff received money from time to time under his decree. He was not, however, subsequently to the decree, registered and treated as "a representative vatanadar" under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 56. In 1875 plaintiff made a dakhast for the attachment of a certain amount belonging to the vatan for arrears due to him under his decree. The money was accordingly attached. Subsequently the Collector issued a certificate to the Subordinate Judge, who had attached it for the removal of the attachment under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 10. The Subordinate Judge accordingly ordered it to be removed, and his order was affirmed by the Assistant Judge on appeal. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a special appeal to the High Court. Held that the lower Courts had no option but to raise the attachment on receiving the Collector's certificate. Held also that as the plaintiff having, according to law as it stood in 1863, succeeded in then establishing his right to be an hereditary deputy dakhast, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 56 of Bombay Act III of 1874. His status as hereditary deputy vatanadar was a fact which neither a Revenue nor a Civil Court could properly ignore or re-open. It was res judicata. Gopal Hanmant Gularjee v. Sakharam Govind

Office of kazi—Kazim allowance, its liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree—Pen-stions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.—The office of kazi is not a hereditary service vatan under Bombay Act III of 1874. Plaintiff obtained a money-decree against H, and in execution sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by H against M, which entitled H to receive annually a certain portion of the 10zina allowance paid by Government to M as kazi. H contended that the 10zina allowance was paid to M and his family for service as kazi, and that therefore it was not liable to the process of a Civil Court under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This contention was upheld by both the lower Courts. Held that, as the kazi's office was not a hereditary service vatan, plaintiff's rights to attach the decree obtained by H against M was not barred by s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. Held also that, as H was not liable to serve as kazi, it was not open to him to urge that the allowance in question was appropriated as service remuneration, and was not therefore transferable. Held also that, as the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Penstions Act (XXIII of 1871) came into force, plaintiff's dakhast was not barred for want of a certificate under s. 4 of the Act. *Dhanandas Samant v. He further alleged that the defendant had been guilty of adultery, and he prayed that, if necessary, it might be declared that the defendant did not constitute a valid marriage, but that, if the marriage should be declared valid, it might be dissolved. At the hearing it was found that the requirements of s. 3 of the Parsee Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865) were complied with as the marriage celebrated with British India. It was also found that the defendant had been guilty of adultery. Held that the jurisdiction of the Court was not

In that case no inflexible rule was laid downassigning supreme and inflexible authority to theDattaka Mimamsa in questions connected with the lawof adoption as followed by the Benares school ofHindu law. The authenticity of the text of theKaika Purana, which lays down that a child mustnot be adopted whose age exceeds five years, is ex-trremely doubtful. The interpretation given to thattext in the Dattaka Mimamsa was not necessarilyintended to be universally applicable, and admits of aconstruction which would confine the application of athe text to Brahmans intended for the priesthood;and various other equally plausible interpretationshave been adopted by other authorities. This beingso, it would be unsafe to act upon the text in questionand upon the interpretation placed upon it in theDattaka Mimamsa so as to set aside an adoption whichtook place many years ago, which had ever sincebeen recognized as valid, and under which the adopteehad ever since been in possession of his adoptivefather's estate upon the single ground that at thetime of the adoption the adoptee son was more thanfive years of age. According to the Kaika Puranaas interpreted by the Dattaka Mimamsa of NandaPandita, an adoption in the Dattaka form is whollynull and void if made after the adoptee has com-pleted the fifth year of his age. It is a mistake tohold that, according to the Dattaka Mimamsa, so longas an adoption takes place while the adoptee is undersix years of age, it is valid. The mistake arises fromsupposing that the word "panchavarsnya" used inparagraphs 48 and 53 of the Dattaka Mimamsa neces-sarily indicates that the person referred to has passedthe fifth anniversary of his birth. It indicates, onthe contrary, that he is in his fifth year. *Thakoor*Conrow Singh v. Thakooran Mehtab Koonwer, 1*N. W., 103a, dissented from. GANGA SARAI v.*LEKHRAJ SINGH . . . I. L. 21. Power to adopt—Validity of power to widow and executors to adopt—Exercise of such power by widow with consent of the surviving executor.—A testator by his will authorized and empowered his wife to adopt a son in the following words: "I hereby authorize and empower my wife and executor, and my executors and trustees, to after my decease a son, and in case of his death during his minority, or on attaining his full age, and without leaving male issue, to adopt a second son, and in case of his death during minority or on attaining such age and without leaving male issue, to adopt a third son, and no more, etc." Held the power of adoption was valid. The testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of insuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption, and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony of adoption from which, under the Hindu law, they were precluded. Held also the power was given to the executors qua executors, and therefore survived to the holders for the time being of the office of executors; the death of one of them before the power was exercised did not therefore render the power void. The power was validly exercised by the wife adopting with the consent of the surviving executor. The mere fact of the surviving executor not having actually and physically taken in adoption was not a failure to comply with the terms of the power. AMRITO LAT DUTT v. SUBHOMON DASS

Held by the Privy Council:—That no one except the widow, authorized for the purpose by her husband, can adopt a son to him after his decease is a principle in the Hindu law of adoption. The power is exercisable by the widow alone, though restriction may be placed upon her choice of a boy by the husband's having made it a condition that persons named by him should concur in the choice. Held therefore that by this will no valid authority to adopt was given to the widow. The conjecture that the testator really meant to give authority to the widow to adopt, restricting her power merely to the extent that there should be others, his executors, who were to consent to the choice of a boy to be adopted by her, could not be accepted as a legitimate construction of the will. The authority was expressed in clear terms to be to the three. It would also be beyond the range of judicial interpretation to construe the will as meaning that

Held on appeal that such power was bad. Under Hindu law, power to adopt can be given to a widow only, and she has no capacity to adopt save under the express permission of her husband given in his lifetime. AMRITO LAT DUTT v. SUBHOMON DASI

“And as I am desirous of adopting a son, I declare that I have adopted K, third son of my eldest brother. My wives shall perform the ceremonies according to the Shastras and bring him up, and until that adopted son comes of age, those executors shall look after and superintend all the property, moveable and immoveable, in my own name or benami, left by me, also that adopted son. When he comes to maturity, the executors shall make over everything to him to his satisfaction.” “God forbid, but should this adopted son die, and my younger brother Nilutun have more than one son, then my wives shall adopt a son of his. If at that time Nilutun has not a son eligible to adoption, they shall adopt another son of Saroda, and the wives and executors shall perform all the above-mentioned acts.” In a suit by one of G's widows as heir of her husband to set aside his will and recover half his property, it appeared that the above-mentioned ceremonies had been performed by one widow only. Held that according to the true construction of the will (which was established by the evidence) there was a gift of his property by the testator to a designated person independently of the performance of the ceremonies. Quere—Whether the performance of the ceremonies was essential to the completeness of the adoption; and if so, whether one widow was effectually empowered to perform them. MIRDOO-MONT DEXA v. SARODA PERSHAD MOOKERJEE [T. R., 31 A., 253; 26 W. R., 91] 43. Proof of performance of ceremonies—Evidence.—In a case to set aside an adoption on the ground that the ceremonies had not been performed, where there was satisfactory evidence showing that the adoption had been continuously recognized for a series of years, and that the party adopted had been in possession, either in person or through his guardian, of the property in dispute, Held that the Court might well dispense with formal proof of the performance of the ceremonies, unless it were distinctly proved, on the part of the plaintiff, that the ceremonies had not been performed. SABO BEWA v. NARAGUN MATHI [2 B. L. R., Ap., 51; 11 W. In this case it was found on the evidence that it was not the intention of the parties to complete the adoption by the mere execution of the deeds. SHOSHINATH GHOSH v. KRISHNA-SUNDARI DASI [T. L. Adoption, Invalidity of—Want of presupposition of husband.—The plaintiff and the defendant were the first defendant, sued to recover a share of the property in the hands of her adoptive mother which she (plaintiff) alleged to be family property. Held that adoption by naktins cannot be recognized by Courts of law, and confers no right on the person adopted. HINDU LAW—ADOPTION—continued.

3. WHO MAY OR MAY NOT ADOPT—continued.

64. Adoption during wife's pregnancy—Posthumous son, Rights of, in family property—Will limiting legal share of such son.—The adoption of a son by a childless Hindu is valid, although at the time of adoption his wife is pregnant. The possibility that a son may afterwards be born to him does not invalidate the adoption. A posthumous son takes the family property by right of survivorship, on the principle of relation back to the time of the father's death, which applies in the analogous case of inheritance and partition, and the rights of such a son stand on the same footing as those of a son in esse at the time of the father's death. A father therefore can no more interfere by his will with the right of a posthumous son to his share of the family property as fixed by law than with the right of a son in esse at the time of his death. An adopted son stands in the position of a natural son, subject to having his share reduced to one-fourth in the event of a natural son being subsequently born. He died, leaving him surviving his widow, who was then pregnant, and the defendant, whom he had adopted, a few days before his death. By his will he directed that, in the event of a son being born to him after his death, his property should be divided equally between such son and the defendant, but otherwise all his property was to go to the defendant. Shortly after his death, a son (the plaintiff) was born. The present suit was brought by the guardian of the plaintiff to recover the family property from the defendant. It was contended that the adoption of the defendant was invalid, having taken place during the pregnancy of the plaintiff's mother, and that his will, in so far as it was in prejudice of the plaintiff's right as a son, was also invalid. Held that the adoption of the defendant by R was valid, notwithstanding that R's wife was pregnant at the time of the adoption. Held also that R's will was inoperative in so far as it reduced the plaintiff's share to a moiety of the property. On the birth of the plaintiff, the defendant, as the adopted son, became by Hindu law entitled only to one-fourth, the plaintiff, as the natural son, taking the other three-fourths. HANANT RAMOHANADA v. BHINDABAYA I. L. R., 12 Bom., 105

65. Vaisya who has undergone the ceremony of Vihut Vida—Custom

as to incapacity to adopt.—There is nothing in the books of authority amongst Hindus to show that a Vaisya who has undergone the ceremony of Vihut Vida is incapable of adopting a son. If a custom to that effect exists, it should be proved by satisfactory evidence. MATIASABAI v. VITHOBA KHANDAPPA GUTVE 7 Bom., 4 p., 26

66. Adoption by leper—

Validity of adoption.—The Hindu law does not prevent a leper from giving his son in adoption. ANAND MONUN MOZOOMDAR v. GOBIND CHANDER MOZOOMDAR W. R., 1864, 173

67. Person under pollution

From death of relative—Validity of adoption.—Objection that the respondent's adoption was not valid because the adopted son was the son of a sister, and properly do so, and on making certain expiatory gifts she was pronounced competent. Under such circumstances, the Court could not hold her to be incompetent. Even if other Shastri were of a different opinion, a Civil Court could not decide between conflicting opinions upon such a question of ecclesiastical etiquette. If an adoption be performed with all requisite rites, with the assistance of priests and in accordance with the opinions of Shastri, the Court will uphold it, even against the opinions of other Shastri expressing or entertaining contrary views. RAVI VINAYAKAR JAGANNATH SHAN-KARTT v. LAKSHMINIBAI I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381

73. Delegation of authority to adopt—Ceremony of adoption.

Under the Hindu law, the widow only can adopt a son to her husband, and she cannot delegate this authority to any other relation. Where a widow performs the principal part of the adoption ceremony—namely, the gift and acceptance,—the fact that at her request the religious part of the ceremony is completed by a relation does not vitiate the adoption. In the case of a young widow, the fact that she was unmarried at the time of the adoption is not such a disqualification as vitiates the adoption. LAKSHMINIBAI v. RAM-CHANDRA I. L. R., 22 Bom., 590

74. Rights of adoption of elder widow—Adoption by younger widow without consent of elder widow invalid, although child selected by both widows—Right of selection.—An adoption by a younger widow, without the consent of the elder widow, of a boy who has previously been selected by all the widows for adoption cannot be supported against the wish of the eldest widow. A younger widow cannot adopt without the consent of the elder. Held that the right of the elder widow was not merely a right of selection. Adoption, of course, implies selection of the child, but there is not complete adoption until the mutual acts of giving and receiving the child are accomplished, and until they take place, there is necessarily a locus penitentie for the elder widow of which she may avail herself, although contrary to the wishes of the other widows, by changing her mind and selecting another child. To hold that any one of the junior widows might perform the formal act of adoption of the selected child whenever it pleased her would be tantamount to enabling her to force the hand of the elder widow and compel her to complete the adoption which, at the most, was only a locus penitentie. The plaintiff was unanimously declared that, if the plaintiff were adopted by C, she would not consent to it. On the 1st July 1866, C adopted the plaintiff without the consent of L. On the 12th August 1869, L adopted the defendant. On the 10th August 1881, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant, alleging himself to be B's adopted son and as such claiming possession of B's property. He did not deny the factum of the defendant's alleged adoption on the 12th August 1869, which constituted (the plaintiff alleged) his cause of action. The defendant contended that he himself was the adopted son of B, having been adopted by L, the senior widow. He insisted that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid, having been carried out without the consent of L, the senior widow. He further contended that the plaintiff's claim to the property was barred by limitation, it having been in possession of himself (the defendant) and L for more than twelve years before this suit was filed. Held that the plaintiff was not the rightfully adopted son of B, and therefore was not entitled to the property in dispute. neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. An elder Hindu widow has the power to adopt a son to her deceased husband without the consent of a younger widow. RAKHMABAI v. RADHABAI

89. Adoption by a widow whose husband died while a minor—Implied authority from minor husband—Adoption from corrupt and improper motives—Onus of proof—Adoption in Gujarat—Kadava Kumbi caste, Adoption among—Custom as to adoption.—In the Maratha country a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband and without the consent of her kindred, adopt a son to him if the act is done by her in the proper and bond fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. But the adoption must not have been expressly forbidden by the husband and must not have the effect of divesting an estate already vested in a third person. There is no reason for drawing any distinction, as regards the general law, between Gujarat and the Maratha country properly so called. Apart from local or caste custom, the general law in Gujarat must be taken to be as stated in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 Bom., A.C., 181. A widow has implied authority from her husband to adopt, even though her husband be a minor. Where a widow adopts, there is a presumption that she has performed the duty from proper motives, and the onus lies heavily on him who seeks to set aside the adoption on the ground of corrupt motive. A Hindu widow in Gujarat having adopted a son to her husband, who died before the completion of his sixteenth year, and who was separated from his brother,—Held that the adoption was valid. The authority of the husband to adopt may be implied, although he was a minor at the time of his death. If adoption by a widow be a meritorious act "beneficial to her husband's soul," assent should be implied in the case of a minor husband, as well as in the case of one who had attained his majority. A Hindu widow having adopted a son about eight years after her husband's death, during her last illness when she was confined to her bed,—Held that that circumstance alone did not afford any sufficient reason for supposing that she was not actuated by the sense of the duty she owed to her husband. The fact that the adoption was made on an inauspicious day showed the anxiety of the widow to adopt, but not the motive. Patel Vandra v. Ekisan v. Patel Manlal Churnilal

108. Undivided Hindu family—Adoption without the consent of husband or his undivided co-parceners and without the authority of her husband to adopt.—A Hindu widow, who has not the estate vested in her, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of his co-parceners with whom he was united in estate at the time of his death. K and V were two Hindu brothers. K had a son who died in 1849 in the lifetime of his father, but who was then united in interest with him (K). K died in 1856, leaving him surviving his two nephews, S and P (the sons of his brother, V), and his daughter-in-law, X (the widow of his predeceased son). At the time of his death, K was united in estate with his nephew S and P. In 1871, X adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband and herself. In 1873 the plaintiff sued P and the sons of S (who died in the meantime) for a share in the family estate. It was found that X had not the authority either of her husband or of her father-in-law, K, or of any of his co-parceners to adopt. Held that the adoption was not valid. Held further that a separated kinsman was not qualified to authorize the adoption. *DINKAR SITARAM v. 104. Assent of a majority of sapindas—Presumption of bona fides—Degree of relationship of sapindas to husband of adopting widow.—A widow, having survived her son (who died unmarried and issueless), succeeded to his estate, and made an adoption with the assent of three out of the four of her late husband's sapindas, who were living at the time and who had been divided from the deceased and from each other. The fourth sapinda, who had refused his consent (apparently without giving reasons for such refusal), now impugned the adoption on the ground that the consent of all existing sapindas was necessary to render it valid, at all events when all stood in the same degree of relationship to the husband of the adopting widow, as was the case here. Held that the assent of every existing sapinda in such a case was not necessary, and that that of a majority would suffice. Collector of Madurai v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moore's I. A., 397, and Parasara Bhattar v. Rangaraja Bhattar, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 202.

102. Authority to adopt—Consent to adopt given by husband's family—Adoption in undivided family—Adoption to a husband separated in estate.—A Hindu widow, who has not the family estate vested in her and whose husband was not separated at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of his undivided co-parceners. Where the husband of a Hindu widow dies separated, and she herself is the heir, or she and a junior co-widow are the heirs, she may adopt without the sanction of the husband (if he have not, expressly or by implication, indicated his desire that she shall not do so) and without the sanction of his kindred. N and J were two Hindu brothers undivided in estate. N died first, leaving a widow, K. J died next, leaving two sons and a widow, G (the defendant). K adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband and herself without the consent either of J's two sons or his widow, G. On the death of K and the two sons of J, the plaintiff sued G (the widow of J) for possession of the family estate. G claimed the estate as heir of her last surviving son, and, while admitting the fact of the plaintiff's adoption by K, denied its validity on the ground that the members of the family had given no assent to the adoption. It was admitted that K had not received from her husband N any permission or direction to adopt a son. Held that the plaintiff's adoption by K was invalid, inasmuch as she had not the authority of her husband or the consent of his undivided co-parceners to adopt, nor did she hold any estate in the property. *RAMJI v. to it as would operate to divest her of her estate. Per FORTON and HOSKING, JJ.—Subsequent assent to an adoption cannot give it validity if it was invalid when made. Per RAKABD, J.—The adoption of the plaintiff was invalid for the double reason that S had no power to adopt, as she was not the widow of the last male holder, and the nearest heirs, the daughters of the deceased P, were not proved to have given their consent to the divesting of the estate, which had come to them by inheritance, in favour of S or the plaintiff. Mere presence at the ceremony and the absence of any objection might imply an acquiescence, but mere acquiescence is not equivalent to consent. *VASUDEO VISHNU MANOHAR v. RAMCHANDRA VINAYAK MODAK. I. An exception to this rule is where a co-widow adopts. Such an adoption will divest the younger widow of her estate. Another exception is where a daughter-in-law adopts with the authority of her father-in-law, who is head of the family, as in Vithoba v. Bapu, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 110. Unless prohibited expressly or by implication, a widow in the Presidency of Bombay has authority to adopt, but a daughter-in-law, i.e., the widow of a predeceased son, must be specially authorized by her father-in-law in order that she may make a valid adoption binding as against the heirs of her father-in-law. S was the widow of B, who died in 1877 in the lifetime of his father R. Fourteen years later, viz., in 1891, R died, leaving a widow Sabai, who succeeded to his estate as his heir. In March 1892 S adopted the plaintiff G as son to her husband, alleging that she had R's permission to do so. G sued for a declaration that as adopted son of B he was entitled to succeed as heir to the property of R as against the defendant V, who claimed to have been adopted by Sabai as son to R. Helid (confirming the decree of the lower Court) that, as the adoption of the plaintiff G was made by S without proper authority and without Sabai's consent, it was inoperative and invalid. As Sabai did not give her consent to the plaintiff's adoption, that adoption did not divest her of her exclusive right to succeed as heir of R. *Gopal Bakrishna Kenate v. Vishnu Bagnanath Kenate. adoption so as to divest (without their consent) third parties, in whom the estate has vested, of their proprietary rights. To this rule there are four exceptions: (1) In the case of co-widows. Though, on the death of the husband without male issue, the estate vests in all his widows, it has been held that the elder widow can, by adopting a son with the express or implied permission of her husband, divest the co-widow or widows of their vested rights. The consent of such younger widows has not been held to be essential. (2) In the case of a mother who succeeds as heir to an unmarried son, legitimate or adopted, who dies after his father. In such a case the right of the widow to take a son in adoption to her husband has been conceded to her, though such a son cannot properly be described as being the heir of the last full owner. (3) When an adoption takes place with the full assent of the party in whom the estate has vested by inheritance, the adoption is validated by such consent. (4) Where there has been ratification by conduct or acquiescence. Per PARSONS, J.—The mere fact that the adopting widow is not the widow of the last male holder would not make an adoption by her spiritually invalid, while any difficulty as to the inheritance and the estate is cured by the assent to the adoption given by the person in whom that inheritance or estate is vested. One B died in 1878, leaving a widow U and a daughter-in-law S him surviving. His only son D, the husband of S, had predeceased him. On B's death, his estate vested in his widow U. In 1879 S, with U's consent, adopted a son (defendant No. 3), which formed part of B's estate, alleging that it had been given to him by U. The first defendant alleged and proved that he had bought the land from the third defendant, who was the adopted son of S. Helid (dismissing the suit) that the adoption was valid, and that the first defendant was entitled to the land. *PARAPPA AKKAPPA PATIL v. He was related to his alleged adoptive father as father's son, that the plaintiff's relationship was not too remote to admit of his being validly adopted in preference to the defendant and other near relatives. Held that the plaintiff, by reason of his natural relationship towards his adoptive father, belonged to the same gotra as the latter, and although such relationship compared with that of the defendant was

India—Validity of adoption.—Among Brahmins the adoption of a son for whom the chudakarana and upanyasna ceremonies have been performed in his natural family is not on that ground invalid. He notwithstanding acquires the legal status of an adopted son, the fact of those ceremonies having been already performed only rendering unnecessary, in a religious point of view, their re-performance and the performance of certain additional ceremonies in the adoptive family, the latter being considered to have the effect of annulling those performed in the boy's natural family. The circumstance that there was a person better qualified than the adoptee would not by itself render such adoption invalid or prevent the principle of factum val. from applying. In a suit for partition of family property, the plaintiff sued as the adopted son of defendant, who had, after performing the usual ceremony of adoption, long treated him as his adopted son. The defendant denied that the plaintiff was his adopted son on the ground (which was established by the evidence) that the plaintiff was married at the date of the ceremony of adoption. The parties were Brahmins and members of the same gotra by birth. Held (1) the adoption set up was invalid; (2) that the defendant was not estopped by his

The authority in the school of Benares of the Datka Mimamsa is not on Nanda Pandita considered. The Mimamsa is not on questions of adoption an "infallible guide" in the school of Benares, and is not followed when it imposes on the right of adoption restrictions not to be found in the recognized authorities of the school of Benares. Held by Barrett, J. On behalf of the defendant it was contended that the adoption of an eldest son was invalid, and that consequently plaintiff's husband did not succeed rightfully to the shebaitship. Held that the adoption of an eldest son, where there are several sons, was not invalid by Hindu law. *Jankar Dharma v. sister's son, and subsequently, apprehending that the adoption was invalid, executed a will by which he left his estate to X. After B's death, X obtained possession, and remained in possession of the estate till his death, which occurred before he had attained majority. After this, joint possession of the estate was obtained by P and S, two widows of B, who set up a right of inheritance from X, as being in the position of mothers to him, in consequence of his adoption by their deceased husband. A suit was brought by S against P for partition of the estate. It was held that the adoption of X by B, a Brahman, was invalid, and that P and S were entitled to succeed him as his heirs. *Pambay v. 184. Sister's son.--The mother's sister's son, and daughter's son.--The adoption of a mother's sister's son by a Hindu of any of the three regenerate classes, Brahmin, Kshatriya, and Vaisya, equally with the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son is contrary to law and void. The ancient texts condemning such adoptions are not only admonitions, but have been judicially decided to be prohibitions of law for such a length of time that it is now not competent to a Court to treat them as open to question in this respect. The judgment in Collector of Madras v. Mooloo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moore's I. A., 437, gives no countenance to the conclusion that, in order to bring a case under any rule of law laid down by recognized authority for Hindus generally, evidence must be given of actual events to show that in point of fact the people subject to that general law regulate their lives by it. *BHAGWAT SINGH v. agreement.—Validity of adoption by unauthorized widow.—Adoption at time of adoption occurring rights of adopted son.—The defendant's husband, A, died intestate in 1873, leaving his widow (L), the defendant, and a son, H, then surviving. A post-humous son, H, was subsequently born to him, who died an infant aged four months. H died in July 1877, aged seven years. The plaintiff adopted him on the 16th April 1878 the defendant adopted him as the heir of her husband, A, and on the same date made an agreement with him (the plaintiff's) natural father, whereby he was deprived of the immediate deceased husband J, and that she thereafter nounced and waived all the benefits which she had tried to claim for herself by the agreement of the 18th April 1878 and expressed her intention to devote herself to a religious life. The plaintiff commenced her suit for recovery of the estate, and that J was in the management of the estate, and that immovable, agreed to accept a boy in adoption on an express agreement by his father that during her lifetime she should be entitled to such property, subject, however, to the boy's maintenance and education, and upon the faith of such agreement adopted the boy, it appearing that she would not have done so at all if it had not been for such agreement.—Held that the agreement was binding upon the adopted son, and that the son's proprietary right was subject to the interest thereby created in favour of his adoptive mother. Held also that under the Hindu law the power exercised by a father in giving his son in adoption is not only co-extensive with the power of a guardian, but is more like the power of an absolute proprietor. CHITKO RAGHUNATH RAO v. Held that the agreement was not void, but was at least capable of ratification when the adopted son became of age. RAVASAMAI AITAN v. VENKATARAMAIAH. [I. L. R., 2 Mad., 91.] [I. R., 6 I. If she do so, it will be cancelled by the said manager or the adopted son; and she will adopt a son with the good advice and opinion of the manager." S, wishing to adopt the plaintiff, sent a registered letter to K, who had refused to give S any advice or assistance, intimating her intention and asking him to come and see the ceremony performed, but he declined to* and you . . . the younger widow may adopt three sons successively." Held that this might more reasonably be construed as giving the elder widow authority to adopt three sons successively, and then a similar power to the younger, than as authorizing simultaneous adoptions. Held also that, supposing that the husband had intended to give such an authority, the law did not allow two simultaneous adoptions. The adoption which subsequently took place was found to have been a simultaneous adoption by the two widows. of the plaintiff was a valid adoption. From the evidence it appeared that the requisite religious ceremonies had been performed. Before the defendant took part in them, Shastri was consulted as to whether the defendant, while unmarried, could properly do so, and on making certain expatory gifts she was pronounced competent. Under such circumstances, the Court could not hold her to be incompetent. Even if other Shastris were of a different opinion, a Civil Court could not decide between conflicting opinions upon such a question of ecclesiastical etiquette. If an adoption be performed with all requisite rites, with the assistance of priests and in accordance with the opinions of Shastris, the Court will uphold it, even against the opinions of other Shastris expressing or entertaining contrary views. Held that the effect of the agreement of the 18th April 1875 was to give the defendant the beneficial ownership of the estate for her life, with the largest possible discretionary powers of management, subject to the duty of maintaining and educating the plaintiff. Held also, following Chitto v. Janki, 11 Bom., 199, that the agreement was valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the defendant had not waived the benefits to which she was entitled under its provisions. Invalid agreement relating to estate of adopted son.—A Hindu widow by his will authorized his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire trust. This power having been exercised, the adopter was questioned on the ground that the widow had agreed, with the natural father of the adopted son, that she should retain the whole estate during her life. Held that this had not rendered the adoption conditional, and that it did not affect the rights of the adopted son. Even if it had amounted to a condition, the analogy, such as it was, presented by the equities relating to powers of appointment under English law, suggested that the condition itself would have been void without invalidating the adoption. Succession of adopted son on the mother's side.—An adopted son under the law prevailing in Bengal occupies, as regards inheritance, the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son (except in a few instances defined in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa), succeeding collaterally, as well as finally, his relations by adoption. *Padma Komanari v. 224. Succession.—Pinda relations.—The rights of an adopted son, unless contracted by express text, are in every respect similar to those of a natural-born son. An adopted son takes by inheritance from the relatives, on the maternal side, of his adoptive father in the same manner as a son begotten would take. There is no difference as regards sapinda relationship between the adopted and natural-born son. Joy Kishore Chowdhary v. Paschoo Baboo.

4 C. L. R., 538

225. Succession.—Lineal and collateral.—According to Hindu law, an adopted son succeeds not only finally, but also collaterally, to the inheritance of his adoptive father's relations. Seemoochunder Chowdhary v. Naimzi Debi.
5 W. R., P. C., 100

226. Termination of authority to adopt.—Succession of adopted son to collaterals in gotra not that of father by adoption.—An instrument of permission (manmat patra) to a Hindu wife to adopt should she be left a widow provided that "dattaka (adopted) son shall be entitled to perform your and my shraddha and that of our ancestors, and to succeed to the property." The husband and wife had a son born, who survived his father, leaving a widow, who, as heir, took possession of it for her widow's estate. The mother then professed to exercise the above power, and in the suit arising thereupon—Bhobunmogee Debi v. Kamakhore Achary Chowdhary, 10 Moore's I. A., 279—it was decided that the son's widow having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be so substituted for her. Held that, although such a substitution might have been disallowed without the adoption being held invalid for all other purposes, the above decision had determined that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow, the power of adoption was incapable of execution, and was at an end; and that this would have been the conclusion if the question of the validity of the power had been raised without any previous decision upon it. An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son, except in a few instances which are accurately defined both in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa, governing authorities in the Bengal school. An adopted son succeeds not only finally, but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations by adoption. Sunbhoochunder Chowdhary v. Narami Debi, 5 W. R., P. C., 100, referred to and followed. Held in this case that the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the father's, was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grandnephew. *Padmakumari Debi Chowdhary v. the plaintiff was not in existence at the time the fraud was committed, such fraud was too remote so far as it affected him, and that the Court, as a Court of Equity, could not disturb the estate which had already vested in B. The right to succession is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property, and cannot, under any circumstances, remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir not conceived at the time of the owner's death. *Keshub Chander Ghose v. According to Hindu law, as laid down in the decided cases, an adoption effected after the death of a collateral relation does not entitle the adopted son to come in among the heirs of such collateral. *Bhubaneswari Debi v. The defendant subsequently, on 18th April 1878, adopted the plaintiff. Held, following *Jamunabai v. Katchand, I. L. Widow with express authority from her husband to adopt—Adoption by such widow cannot divest estate by inheritance devolved from a collateral heir of the husband—Adoption by elder brother's widow after younger brother's death.—K and his two sons, B and N, were members of an undivided family. B died first, leaving a widow: then K died. On his death N succeeded to the family property. N afterwards died, leaving him surviving his widow, the defendant G, who then got possession of the said property. After N's death, however, B's widow adopted the plaintiff as a son after his death. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the District Judge rejected his claim. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff was not, by virtue of his adoption, entitled to oust the defendant G from the estate of her husband. At the time of his death, N was full owner as last survivor of the joint family. The property then devolved as his, and a subsequent adoption, however well authorized to B, G, who did not claim through B at all. 9. EVIDENCE OF ADOPTION—continued.

261. Adoption by dharm-putr

Ceremony of dharm-putr.—An adoption made by a Parsi immediately before his death would render extremely improbable the execution of a will by him on very short time previous thereto, and therefore call for very clear proof to establish its existence. Although in cases of adoption by dharm-putr (a partial adoption) it is not indispensably necessary that a declaration should be made on the third day after the decease, yet it is usual to make such a declaration and to take a writing from the dharm-putr. In evidence, the adoption in this case was pronounced to be as a putr-putr, and not merely as a dharm-putr. HOYABHARE v. PUNJABHARE DOSABHARE 15 W. R., P. C., 102

262. Requisition for validity

Registration—Acknowledgment in writing.—According to Hindu law, neither registration of the act of adoption nor any written evidence of that act having been completed is essential to its validity. In no case should the rights of wives and daughters be transferred to strangers or to more remote relations, unless the fact of adoption by which this transfer is effected be proved by evidence free from all suspicion of fraud, and so consistent and probable as to give no occasion for doubt of its truth. Although the Hindu law does not require that adoptions should be acknowledged in writing, it is usual, when persons in the situation of a zamindar adopt sons, to acknowledge such adoption in writing, to give notice to the ruling power, and to invite the neighbouring zamindars and others to be present at such an adoption. SUBBOOGUN SUTPUTT v. SARI TRADY 5 W. R., P. C., 109

263. Deed expressing

wish to adopt a particular person.—A cousin and heir to an insane proprietor having been sued for the amount of a decree, and application having been made for execution against the estate of the said proprietor after his death, it was urged that the estate had become the property of a minor who had been adopted by the insane proprietor previously to his decease, and could not be held liable for the debts of the cousin and heir, who, moreover, had formally relinquished his right to it. The plaintiff's claim rested on the contention that the formalities required to validate an adoption had not been attended to in this case. This contention was met by the plea that the adoption was complete, but that, even if it had not been so, a document declaring the deceased proprietor's desire to adopt the minor had the effect of a testament. Held by the High Court that, though the intention of the deceased proprietor to adopt the minor was clear, that intention, even as expressed in the above-mentioned document, which was not testamentary in character, did not amount to an adoption in the absence of the necessary formalities. The estate was accordingly declared liable for the amount of the decree against the cousin and heir. BARKS PRASHAD v. COURT OF WARD 25 W. R., 192

9. EVIDENCE OF ADOPTION—continued.

264. Evidence of conditional adoption.—In a suit in which a claim was made in virtue of an alleged adoption to the estate of a deceased Hindu, the widow made a compromise, not in writing, with the claimant where the adoption was admitted, but alleged to have been on condition that the widow should enjoy the entire property for her life without power of alienation, and that, after her death, her minor daughters should take the self-acquired property, and the claimant should succeed to the ancestral estate. Held that the evidence to establish such a conditional adoption must, as in the case of a nuptial will, be very strong. KONWAR v. ROOP NARAIN SINGH 6 C. L. R., 76

265. Deed purporting to make adoption—Giving and taking.—An ekaratnama executed by the natural father in favour of the adoptive father recited that the former had made over his third son to the sonship of the adoptive father, so that the latter might, whenever he would wish, fulfil the rights of adoption in accordance with the Shastras and the usage of the country, and from that day the natural father would have no claim or right in respect of the said son. Held that this deed did not of itself operate to effect an adoption. It did not even amount to a giving and taking of the boy, as it contemplated the subsequent performance of the necessary rites. Held, further, that deeds of this kind did not take the place of the necessary evidence as to the actual adoption. MANNIT KORE v. PHOOL CHAND LAL 2 C. W. N., 154

266. Factum of adop*tion—Onus probandi—Custom among Shastriyas.*—The ruling of the Privy Council in Shoshinath Ghose v. Krishna Soodant Das, L. R., 7 I. A., 250, has no application to a case in which there is ample evidence, both oral and documentary, to prove the factum of adoption. Where it was sought to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate, on the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age, it was held that the onus of proof was upon the person who alleges the adoption to be invalid. Haimun Chull Singh v. Koomer Gunsham Sing, 5 W. R., P. C., 69, referred to. In a case where the validity of an adoption was in dispute and the parties to the suit were Shastriyas, Held that, even if it had been established that five years was the rigid and inflexible limit of age for the validity of all adoptions among the "twice-born" classes, so as to be applicable even to Shastriyas, in the circumstances of the case it would be necessary to have a full investigation of the question whether, among the clan of the Shastriyas to which the parties belonged, any such rigid rule prevailed. *GANGA SAGAI v. The power of alienation resting upon the general law, inalienability, if existing, must depend upon family custom in this respect and of such custom proof is required. Annal Lal Singh Deo v. Dhery Gurm Narain Deo, 5 Moore's I. A. 82, followed. In the case of a titular raj of which the lately deceased raja had made a mokumra potah, or grant in perpetuity, of part of the zamindari lands thereto belonging in favour of a younger son, it was found that the only custom proved was that the raj estate descended to the eldest son, to the exclusion of the other

On the death of the grantor, his minor son and next friend (authorized in that behalf by the Collector of the district as his successor, by the Collector of the district as his lessee to have the lease set aside. Held by the Court of Wards, now and the assignee of the Court of Wards, that the lease was not one which a managing member of an ordinary joint family governed by Mitabhar law could providently enter into. Per Mitabhar

The Collector, on the objection of one of A's brothers (who denied A's right to alienate on the ground that it was ancestral property), refused to register the daughter's name as proprietor. Held that the Collector was bound by Bengal Regulation VIII of 1900 s. 21, to register her name as purchaser, but that such mutation of name was to be without prejudice to the question of the right of succession. *COMPTON KOOYER v. principles of justice, equity, and good conscience. There is no authority to show that it is to be applied to cases governed by the Hindu law in a manner exceeding the limits recognized by the Roman civil law in which it originated. Its application in cases of adoption should be confined to questions of formalities, ceremonies, precedence in the matter of selection, and similar points of moral or religious significance, which relate to what may be termed the modus operandi of adoption, but do not affect its essence. There may be cases where matters which in other systems would be regarded as merely formal, are by the express letter of the texts made matters affecting the essence of the transaction, and such texts may be sufficiently imperative to vitiate an adoption in which they have been disregarded; but unless their meaning is undoubted, the doctrine of factum valet should be restricted to adoptions which, having been made in substantial conformity to the law, have infringed minor points of form or selection. Adoption under the Hindu law being in the nature of a gift, it contains three elements—capacity to give, capacity to take, and capacity to be the subject of adoption—which are essential to the validity of the transaction, and as such are beyond the scope of the doctrine of factum valet. *Uma Devi v. Gokoolanand Das Alakapatri, I. R., 5 I. A., 40; Hanuman Tiwari v. Chitra, I. L. R., 2 All., 164; Singamma v. Vinjamuri Venkataswami, 4 Mad., 164; Dharmadasi v. Ramkrisna Chinnai, I. L. The rule of factum valet applies in cases of adoption only where “there is neither want of authority to give or to accept, nor imperative interdiction of adoption.” Pada- jiray v. Ramray

On the death of M, the 1st defendant's father entered into possession of the property, and afterwards, during the minority of his son (1st defendant), associated with himself the plaintiff on promise of a share. In accordance with this agreement, the plaintiff joined the 1st defendant's family, and continued for many years aiding in the management and improvement of the property, until, a short time before the present suit was brought, the 1st defendant turned the plaintiff out of doors and refused to give him the promised share. Upon these facts.—Held by Holtoway and JAMES, J., that the 1st defendant's father was what is called in English law a purchaser, and had all the powers of disposition existing over self-acquired property; that also there was a complete adoption or ratification of the father's contract by 1st defendant, and that he ought to be held to it. By JAMES, J.—That the right of 1st defendant's father to dispose of property self-acquired might depend upon whether the acquisition was or was not in being at the date of the acquisition. *Chaita Parri Reddi v. 17. — Property inherited by father collaterally.—Power of son to prevent alienation.

In execution of a decree against A, a Hindu living under the Mitakshara law, his right, title, and interest in a certain property, part of which he had acquired as heir to his nephew and cousin, was sold. A suit brought by A's sons to obtain possession of their share of the property, on the ground that the debt for which the sale was held had not been incurred under a legal necessity, was dismissed so far as it related to the part of the property which A had inherited collaterally. According to the Mitakshara, a son cannot prevent alienation by his father of property which the latter has inherited collaterally. The restriction upon the father's power of alienation only applies to the grandfather's property. Nund Coomarr Lall v. Karsoodharn Hossain 10 B. L. R., 183: 18 W. R., 477

—Pious purposes—Mitakshara law.—According to the Mitakshara law, a father is not incompetent to sell immovable property acquired by himself, and distributed by him amongst his sons, does not by such sale without the consent and to the prejudice of the grandson. The sale by a father of ancestral immovable property, without the concurrence of his sons, is not necessarily void, though it may be avoided, unless season of distress, for the sake of the family or for pious purposes. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the price received by the father became a part of the assets of the joint family; and therefore, if the son seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the purchase-money, unless he can show that no part of such purchase-money or the produce of it has ever come to his hands. *MURDAR GOPAL THAKOOR v. the debt. A zamindari inherited from a maternal grandfather is not "self-acquired" property. Quare—Whether the zamindari, having inherited from his maternal grandfather, was under the same restriction, in reference to alienation as against the son, as he would have been if the property had come through the male line. *MUTTAYAN CHETTI v. 49. Ancestral property—Son's share—Rights of co-partners—Fur- ther—Right of.—Under the law of the Mitakshara, each son upon his birth takes a share equal to that of his father in ancestral immovable estate, and can compel his father to make partition of such estate. The rights of the co-partners in a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his sons do not differ from those of the co-partners in a like family consisting of undivided brethren, except in so far as the sons are affected by the obligation of the Hindu law to pay their father's debts, and by the fact that he is naturally the manager of the joint family estate. It is settled law in the Madras Presidency that one co-partner may dispose of ancestral undivided estate to the extent of his own share, even by private conveyance, whether for value or by gift. In the Bombay Presidency, unauthorized alienations, voluntary, made by one co-partner, are good, even for his own share, only when made for value. In Bengal, the law which prevails in the other Presidencies as to alienation by private deed has not yet been adopted, but it is now settled that the purchaser of undivided property, sold in execution of a decree during the life of the debtor for his separate debt, acquires the debtor's interest in such property, with the power of ascertaining and realizing it by partition. Under the Hindu law, subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father. Accordingly, where ancestral property has passed out of the family either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were of a kind for which they would not have been liable, and that the purchasers had notice to that effect; and a purchaser at an execution-sale, being a stranger to the suit without such notice, is not bound to make enquiry beyond what appears on the surface of the proceedings. In a suit by the members of an undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara to set aside a sale of joint ancestral property which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against their deceased father, on the ground that the debt was not one for which such property could be made liable, it appeared that prior to the sale the plaintiffs had preferred a claim of objection thereto on the same grounds, and that the Court of execution had declined to adjudge the claim, and had

47. Minor sons—Debt contracted to enable father to earn a maintenance.—The expression "family necessity—Debt contracted to enable father to earn a maintenance.—The expression "family necessity," justifying the sale of ancestral property, must be construed reasonably, and the head of the family and those dealing with him must be supported in transactions which, though in themselves diminishing the estate, yet prevent or tend to prevent still greater losses. A reasonable latitude must be allowed for the exercise of a manager's judgment, especially in the case of a father, though this must not be extended so far as to free the persons dealing with him from the need of all precautions where a minor son has an interest in the property. The fact that a mortgage or a bond, to pay off which ancestral property is sold, had some time to run is not a sufficient reason to disprove an otherwise apparent family necessity. The Hindu law recognizes a debt contracted by the father of a family to enable him to earn a maintenance as one contracted under pressure of a family necessity. BABAI MAHAJAN v. KRISHNAJI DEVI. I. L. R., 2 Bom., 666

48. Self-acquired property—Zamindari inherited from maternal grandfather.—The course of decisions in the Madras Presidency from 1818 has been to recognize equal ownership by the son in the grandfather's estate, though it may not be divided between the father and the son, and to uphold the father's alienation only to the extent of his share. B. T. R., 187, was not intended to vary the courses of decisions in this presidency. Semble—The doctrine of the pious duty of the son to pay his father's debts does not apply in the case of an impartible zamindari, where the son is not able to protect his interest as in the case of ordinary property by electing a division. MUTTAYAN CHETTI v. ZAMINDAR OF SIVAGIRI [I. L. R., 3 Mad., 370]

But—Held on appeal to the Privy Council, which reversed the decision of the High Court, that the estate which a son takes by heritage from his father constitutes assets by descent for the payment of his father's debt not incurred for any immoral or vicious purpose. This estate may be attached and sold in execution of a decree upon such a debt, and that it is an impartible zamindari does not alter the case. The principle that the ancestral property, in which the son acquires an interest by birth, is liable for the father's debt, unless within the above exception, holds good by the Mitakshara law as administered in Madras as well as in Bombay and Bengal. Griffith v. Kamoo Lal, 14 B. T. R., 187; I. R., 1 I. A., 321, referred to and followed. Part of an impartible zamindari inherited from a maternal grandfather was hypothecated by the zamindar as security for a debt not within the above exception. Held that all the right, title, and interest which had come to his son by heritage from the indebted zamindar, as well in the hypothecated part as in the rest of the zamindari, were liable, so far as they had not been administered in payment of the father's debt, to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the father, based on his admission of father and son were possessed of immovable ancestral property consisting of certain houses. The father, becoming insolvent, took the benefit of the Insolvent Act; and the usual vesting order, under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, was thereupon made. Shortly afterwards the father died, and soon after his death the Official Assignee sold the houses in question to the defendant in order to raise money to pay off the deceased insolvent's debt. The son now brought a suit to recover the whole or a portion of the said houses, contesting the right of the Official Assignee to convey any interest, or at least his interest in the said houses, to the purchaser. Held that the sale was valid, and conveyed to the purchaser the interest of the plaintiff as well as that of his deceased father. Under the Mitakshara law, a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immovable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes; and a vesting order made under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act vests that right in the Official Assignee, who can therefore give a good and complete title to such ancestral immovable estate to a purchaser. The death of the insolvent had no effect on the proceedings in his insolvency or on the power of the Official Assignee. The ancestral estate provisionally vested in the Official Assignee was not therefore divested from him, and vested in the son by right of survivorship. See—In the event of the father's estate producing a surplus over and above the amount required to satisfy his debts, such surplus might be made available to answer the claims of the son in respect of his interest in ancestral immovable property sold in the realization of the father's estate.

A decree properly obtained against the father can be executed by sale of such ancestral estate, and the interests of the sons as well as of the father will be bound by it. A purchaser at such sale is not bound to enquire into the circumstances under which the decree was made. Gundha-ree Lal v. Kantoo Lal. 14 B. L. R., 187 regarding that the judgment may be enforced as a legal obligation, it would be a good defence under the ancient Hindu law for the son to plead that the obligation could not arise in his father's lifetime to pay a debt contracted by the father for his own purposes. The decision in Girdhars Tall's case ought not to be followed in this Presidency—(1) because of the peculiar view which has prevailed,

as to the nature of the pious obligation, for more than forty years, (2) because of the doctrine of universality of undivided interest which has been generally recognized as a matter of equity for more than sixty years, and as a matter of right for upwards of twenty years, (3) because the son's right of intervention and power to demand creditors, provided by the Mitaksharas, have been taken away by recognizing that an undivided interest is on the footing of the co-partner's separate property for the against a Hindu father by his creditors, there is nothing special to warrant a rigorous extension of the parties. There is no legal basis for any distinction between a decree in which there is a direction for the sale of mortgaged property and a simple money decree. The interest that passes by a Court sale

Under Mithabhar law, according to the rulings of the judicial committee, the payment, even in the father's lifetime, of an antecedent debt

due by him as a pious duty on the part of the son, and its discharge is therefore such a necessary purpose as to give validity to a sale or mortgage by the father as against his minor son. Such antecedent debt means a debt antecedent to the transaction, property would be bound, notwithstanding a 20, chap. 1, s. 1, and a 10, chap. 1, s. 11 of the

Mithabhar law. In respect of ancestral property the son is equally liable for his father's debts, if not incurred for immovable purposes, as for his own debts.

The interest of an adult son, however, could in ordinarily be affected by a decree against the father alone. Where, however, an adult son, although neither an executor of the bond on which the suit was brought nor a party to such suit, yet was able to be himself liable for a large proportion of the antecedent debt due on the bond, and by his conduct had made it apparent that he approved of and fully acquiesced in the sale of the whole ancestral property, and remained in possession for upwards of eleven years and to express an opinion off circumstances on the estate, it was, in a suit by the son to recover his share of such ancestral property, held that he was not entitled to succeed.

Under the circumstances,

the son ought to have been made a party to the suit brought by the mortgagee. The principle laid down

It was not proved that the mortgage-debt was incurred for the benefit of the family, nor was it proved that it was incurred for immoral or illegal purposes by the father. Held that the mortgage was only binding on the father's one-fourth share, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover one-fourth of the property mortgaged from the mortgagee. *VENKATANDRA SITARAMASAMI v. The decree provided that the plaintiff recover the amount with costs and interest, and that the decree be executed against the property specified in the bond, and it also allowed interest at about 50 per cent, the rate in the bond, to the decree-holders. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that, upon a proper construction of the Privy Council ruling in Mudun Thakoor v. Kantoo Tall, 14 B. L. R., 187, the decree, under which the property had been sold was an improper one. Held that, under the Privy Council ruling, the purchaser is not bound to look beyond the decree. Held also that an usurious rate of interest cannot be treated, within the principles of the above case, as showing that the decree was for a debt which the son was not bound to discharge. *LUCHMI DAI KOORI v. the conveyance or led the alienee by his conduct to suppose that he assented to the alienation, he will be estopped from disputing its validity. Mitakshara family.—The mere fact of a decree being passed against the father only of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law will not lead necessarily to the conclusion that what was sold in execution of that decree is only the father's interest in the joint family property. Notwithstanding the decree being against the father only under certain circumstances, there may be a valid sale of a joint property belonging to the family in execution thereof. In execution of two money-decrees against A alone, the right, title, and interest of A in certain joint family property was sold, and the entire share of the joint family was taken possession of by the auction-purchasers. In a suit by the minor son and the wife of A, who with A constituted a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of their shares in the property sold,—Held that, although the plaintiffs were not parties to the decrees in execution of which the sales took place, the mere fact of A being sued alone was not sufficient to justify the finding that only his right, title, and interest passed under the sales; and that, as the facts of the case showed that the decrees were passed with reference to transactions which clearly concerned the joint family, the whole of the share of the joint family in the properties sold passed to the auction-purchaser; the plaintiffs having failed to show that the debts, which were the foundation of the decrees in the execution of which the sales were held, were contracted for immoral purposes. *Umblac Posing Tewary v. The High Court remanded the case for the trial of an issue upon this point. The lower Court found that the property was ancestral, and affirmed the original decree. Held that, assuming the property in dispute was ancestral, and that the mortgage was not valid against the sons, the plaintiffs were still entitled to recover the debt by the sale of the property of the father and the sons, because, supposing that the debt was contracted for personal purposes of the father, still the ancestral property in the hands of the sons was liable for the debt, it being not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes. *Suchun Dass v. incurred by his father for immoral purposes. Held that the son was not entitled to succeed in such suit merely because, although he was of age, he was not made a party to the suit to enforce the mortgage required by the mortgagee to join in the mortgage, and was not made a party to the suit to enforce the mortgage; but that he was in the same position as he would have been had he been a minor at the time the mortgage was made and the decree was passed, and was therefore only entitled to succeed if he showed that the debt incurred by his father was incurred for immoral purposes of his own. Held further that, inasmuch as the debt in question was incurred for necessary purposes, and as the son was aware of the mortgage and did not protest against it, but on the contrary stood by and benefited thereby, and as he was aware of the suit and did not apply to be made a party thereto, he was asking too late for the relief which he sought. *Ram Narain Lal v. Alienation of ancestral property by father—Suit by son to recover his interest—Burden of proof.—Where a Hindu, a minor, governed by the law of the Mitakshara, sued to set aside an alienation of ancestral property made by his father, on the ground that such alienation was made to satisfy a debt contracted for immoral purposes, Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the burden of proving that the debt was contracted for such purposes, and that the defendant had notice that it was contracted for such purposes, lay on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was not discharged from such burden because he had proved generally that his father had been guilty of extravagant waste of the ancestral property. Hanooman Pershad Pandey v. Babooes Minwar Koonweres, 6 Moore's I. A., 392, and Swayy Bansi Koonweres, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, referred to. Held also by STRAIGHT, J., that it could not be presumed from such conduct of the father that the debt in question had been contracted for immoral purposes. Pers Stuar, C.J., that the plaintiff's father having been guilty of extravagance and waste of the ancestral property, the burden of proof in this case lay on the defendant. As, however, there was reason to suspect that the suit was a collusive one, brought at the instance of the plaintiff's father, if not really by him, and it was very doubtful whether the alienation was objectionable on the ground taken in the name of the plaintiff, it would not be safe to give the plaintiff a decree. HANU- MAN SINGH v. Mitakshara law—Execution of decree—Sale of ancestral estate in satisfaction of father's debt—Parties to proceedings.—There is no conflict of authority as to the principle that sons cannot set up their rights, jointly with their father in ancestral estate, against their father's creditors' remedies for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for an immoral purpose; the law on this point being that

The tender of these moneys such the father to recover them by the sale of the estate, and obtained a decree against him directing its sale, and sought to bring the estate to sale in the execution of such decree. Held, in a suit by the minor son to protect his share in the estate from sale in the execution of such decree, that the suit in which such decree was made, and such decree, being regarded as a suit against the father, and as a decree made against him as representing the family, such decree might be executed against the estate, notwithstanding the minor son had not formally been joined as a defendant in such suit. *Bissessur Lal Sahoo v. Joint Hindu family property—Right of son.—B, a member of a joint undivided Hindu family consisting of himself and his son R, as the manager of the family, borrowed moneys for lawful purposes and executed a bond for their repayment, in which he hypothecated a share of mouzah B, such share being ancestral property, as collateral security for their repayment, with the knowledge and approbation of R. The oblige of such bond sued B thereon and obtained a decree, which directed the sale of such share, and such share was put up for sale and was purchased by C. R subsequently sued B and his mother for partition of the family property, including such share, claiming a one-third share of such property. C was made a defendant in the suit, and so was F, R's grandmother, who claimed to share equally with the other members of the family in such property. Held that it must be presumed that B was sued on such bond, and that the decree in such suit was made against him as the head of the family, and R could not recover from C the share of mouzah B. RADHA KISHAN MAN v. Adulter son—Mortgage of family property by father—Decree against father—Right of son.—The father in a joint undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara mortgaged the ancestral property of the family as security for a debt incurred by him. His son was of age at the time of the mortgage, but the mortgagee did not make the son join in the mortgage. When the mortgagee brought a suit to enforce the mortgage, he brought it against the father alone; and he obtained a decree against the father being attached in execution of the decree, the son alone for the sale of the property. On the property being attached in execution of the decree, the son objected to the sale of the property, so far as his own share according to Hindu law was concerned. This objection having been disallowed, he sued the mortgagee for a declaration that such share was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree, claiming on the ground that he was not bound by the mortgage or the decree, not having joined in the mortgage or been a party to the suit in which the decree was made, and that the mortgage had been necessity or laid out in necessary expenses, but used in G's personal expenses. Held that this evidence did not justify the lower Court in decreeing that the debt should be charged on the share of the father alone in the ten biswas mortgaged, as it did not establish that he had wasted the money on immoral purposes, or that the debt was such that a pious son would be free to repudiate it. *Nannam Babuasa v. Suit by sons to set aside alienation—Burden of proof.—The rule enunciated by the Privy Council in Muddan Thakoor v. Kanoo Lal, 14 B. L. R., 187, and Surya Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, "that where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debt, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes to the knowledge of the vendee or mortgagee," is limited to antecedent debts, i.e., to debts contracted before the sale or mortgage sought to be impeached by the son; and it does not cover cases in which a sum in ready money has been paid over to the father by the vendee or mortgagee. The authorities seem to come to this, that in those cases where a person buys ancestral estate, or takes a mortgage of it from the father, whom he knows to have only a limited interest in it, for a sum of ready money paid down at the time of the transaction, such person, in a suit by the sons to avoid it, must establish that he made all reasonable and fair inquiry before effecting the sale or mortgage, and that he was satisfied by such inquiry, and believed, in paying his money, that it was required for the legal necessities of the joint family, in respect of which the father, as head and managing member, could deal with and bind the joint ancestral estate. LAL SINGH v. DEO NARAIN SINGH. I. L. R., 8 All., 279.

Remedy against sons how affected by reason of his having sued the father separately.—Although a decree may have been obtained against the father of a joint Hindu family for a debt incurred by him, a subsequent suit is maintainable against the son in respect of the same debt for the enforcement of the son's liability for it, such debt being one which the son is legally bound to pay. The creditor may in his original suit implead the son, but his omitting to do so will not deprive him of his subsequent remedy against the son. There is no difference in principle as regards the subsequent remedy of the creditor against the son between the case of a debt secured by a mortgage and a simple money debt. *Lachmi Narain v. Kunji Lal, I. L. R., 16 All., 449; Balmakund v. Sangari, I. L. R., 19 All., 379; Bhacani Prasad v. Kallu, I. L. R., 17 All., 537; Ramasami Nadan v. Ulaganatha Goundan, I. L. Joint family property sold in execution of a decree on a mortgage against the father alone—Decree satisfied—Subsequent recovery by the sons of part of the mortgaged property—Remedy of mortgagees.—A mortgagee held a mortgage of joint family property given by the father alone. He sued on his mortgage without making the sons parties to the suit, and, having obtained a decree, brought the whole of the joint family property to sale and purchased it himself. This purchase, together with a further cash payment of Rs. 59, satisfied the mortgage-debt. After the mortgage had been thus satisfied, the sons brought a suit for recovery of their shares in the joint family property amounting to one-fourth, and obtained a decree, and got possession of the property claimed. The mortgagees then brought a suit against the sons to recover from them a share of the mortgage-debt proportionate to the share in the joint family property owned by them. Held that the original mortgage having become extinct, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for one-fourth of the price realized by the mortgaged property at auction-sale and to recover the same by sale of the interest of the sons in the joint family property. Bhawan Prasad v. Kallu, I. L. R., 17 All., 537, referred to. Dharman Singh v. Angan Lal, I. L. R., 21 All., 301, followed. LACHMAN DAS v. DATU. I. L. R., 22 All., 394.

Joint family property in execution of such decree—Sons' interest in the family property when bound by decree against the father or by sale effected by the father.—Where in a joint Hindu family the father disposes of family property, the son's interest is bound, unless the son can show, in proceedings taken for that purpose, that the disposal of the property by his father was made under circumstances which deprived his father of his disposing power. So also, where family property is sold under proceedings taken against the father alone, the son's interest is bound, unless the son can show, in proceedings taken for that purpose, that the disposal of the property by his father was made under circumstances which deprived his father of his disposing power. So also, unless the son can show that the sale was on account of an obligation to which he was not subject. The father is, in fact, the representative of the family both in transactions and in suits, subject only to the right of the sons to prevent an entire dissipation of the estate by particular instances of wrongdoing on the father's part. JAGABHAI LATUBAI v. sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title, and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale, notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. Meld, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an immoral or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. *BHAGWAT PRASAD v. 112. Mortgage by a father—Decree against father on joint family—

*Mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Sons' liability to satisfy the decree as to interest and costs.—The plaintiffs' father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court, Held that under the decree passed against the father the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable, just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for trade or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself, and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable, although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so, yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion.*

110. Joint Hindu family—Mortgage by father—Suit to enforce the mortgage against sons' shares—Legal necessity—

Burden of proof.—As a general rule, a creditor endeavouring to enforce his claim under a hypothecation-bond given by a Hindu father against the estate of a joint Hindu family in respect of money lent or advanced to the father having only a limited interest should, if the question is raised, prove either that the money was obtained by the father for a legal necessity or that he made such reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the other legal necessities of the family. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by their father for an antecedent debt. Where a son comes into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by his father for an antecedent debt, it is for the son to make out a case for the relief asked for. In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father, and in which family property was hypothecated, no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that, no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. *JAYNA v. 111. Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of sons' share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family under the Mitakshara cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The sons' position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. Deceitful Act, Certificate of Collector under.—The power of the father, as representative of the family, to bind the son's interests in the family estate, except in special cases, being judicially recognized, the onus of establishing the existence of those special circumstances necessarily lies on the sons for the purpose of defeating his creditors' remedies against the ancestral debt due on a mortgage-bond alleged to have been executed in 1878 by the defendant's father (since deceased) to the plaintiff's father. The defendant (inter alia) pleaded that the loan was contracted without his knowledge and for immoral purposes, and that his share in the mortgaged property was not answerable for the debt. He also contended, as to a sum of Rs 109-8-0 claimed by the plaintiff, that this sum was claimed in respect of arrears, and was not recoverable by the plaintiff without a certificate under the Pensions Act. The lower Court found that the defendant's father had been a man of extravagant and vicious habits, but held that the defendant had failed to prove that the debt in question had been contracted for immoral purposes. The Judge therefore awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, held, dismissing the decree of the lower Court, that the burden lay on the defendant of proving that the loan suit was for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that the defendant had not discharged this burden. The more proof that his father had been a man of extravagant and immoral habits was not enough. Held also that, as no certificate from the Collector had been produced, as required by the Pensions Act, the claim to Rs 109-8-0 should be disallowed. On their suing for an injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree, on the ground that it was not binding on them, Held that the question how far the sons are bound by a decree against the father must be decided with reference to the particular facts of each case. If the father is manager and the question in issue is one which equally affects him and the other members of the family, and if the suit is properly defended, the adjudication will bind all the persons interested with the father, since in that case it will be presumed that the father represents their interests. ing during that time the enjoyment of the property by the father's vendee. The Court refused to set aside the alienation. The alienation would not have been set aside at any rate without a refund of the purchase-money to the defendants. SUBBIA NARAYAN CHOWDRY v. SHEW GOBIND PANDAY

6. ALIENATION BY MOTHER.

144. — Mortgage by a married woman of property inherited from her father—Legal necessity—Expenses of daughters marriage.—Ordinarily it is the duty of the father in a Hindu family to provide for his daughter's marriage, but whether the father was not possessed of sufficient means to do so, and the mother, to raise money to meet the expenses of the daughter's marriage, mortgaged property of her own which had come to her from her father, it was held that the mortgage was made for legal necessity, and was a valid mortgage. RUSTAM SINGH v. MOTI SINGH [L. T. R., 18 APR., 474]

145. — Woman's estate—Power of alienation—Gift of land on daughter's marriage.—A Hindu, in whom the whole of the family property had vested, died without issue and his mother took the estate. She subsequently gave a portion of the property to her son-in-law on the occasion of his marriage with her daughter. The gift was not found to be otherwise than reasonable in extent. Held that the gift was binding on the reversioner. RAMASAMI AYYAR v. VENKATRAM AYYAR [L. L. R., 22 Mad., 113]

 widow stands in a different position from that of manager of a joint family. The latter can act only with the consent, express or implied, of the body of co-partners. In the widow's case, the co-partners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can therefore do what the body of co-partners can do, subject always to the condition that she act fairly to the expectant heirs. The rights of these heirs impose, on persons dealing with a widow, the obligation of special circumspection, failing which they may find their securities against the estate to be of no avail after the widow's death. CHANDRAJI GOVIND GONDHOL v. DINKAR DIONDER GONDHOL. [I. L. R., 11 Bom., 320.]

157. Legal necessity—Necessity.
Devicence of—A sale by a Hindu widow of land inherited by her from her husband is valid only when made of necessity and for certain purposes; but on this point, where the plaintiff in a suit to set aside such a sale has relied in the Court below solely on the ground that the land had been devised inconsistently with the exercise of the widow's power of sale, the Appellate Court will be satisfied with evidence less complete and positive than would otherwise have been required. RANGASWAMI AYYANGAR v. VANDU-LATAYAL. [I. Mad., 28.]

158. Cause of action.—A, a Hindu widow, obtained a loan of a sum of money by mortgage of a certain parcel of property belonging to her husband. The mortgagee obtained a decree, and in execution thereof caused the property to be sold. In a suit by A's daughter's son, the next reversionary heir, for a declaration that the sale was invalid as against him, the lower Appellate Court held that there was no cause of action. Held in special appeal that the existence of a cause of action depended upon whether the widow incurred the debt under legal necessity, and the case was remanded for trial of that question. BISTONBHAKT SAKH v. LATA BAIYAM PRASAD. [I. B. L. R., 213; 18 W. R., 49.]

159. Alienation of ancestral property.—Joint law.—The alienation by gift by the widow of a Bindala share of her husband's ancestral property is invalid according to the Mitakshara, which is the ordinary law governing Bindala shares in the absence of custom to the contrary. BHONIRI v. MAKHAN LAL. [I. L. R., 3 All., 55.]

160. Alienation.—A conveyance of ancestral property by a Hindu widow without proof of necessity, can only operate as a conveyance of her life-interest. The purchase of a kinsman sold for Government revenue does not destroy the pre-existing rights of the holders of the tenure. Reversioners are as much entitled to have a sale of their share in such a kinsman set aside as a sale of any other property by the widow without necessity. TAKINIA CHUDEN BANERJEE v. NUND COOMAR BANERJEE. [I. W. R., 47.]

 purpose not justifying alienation of the former. SHROTHAN SIVAR v. SAKAR SINGH. [I. L. R., 14 Cal., 387.]

154. Accumulations—Period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow.—The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has availed no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. Where she invests her income, making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investment, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. GURSHI CHUDDER ROY v. BRODHANTY. [I. L. R., 14 Cal., 861.]

155. Hindu widow's—Her right to dispose of accumulated income not made part of the inheritance—Intention of the widow in regard to it.—The executor of the will of a Hindu testator made over to the widow of the latter an aggregate sum consisting of accumulations of income accrued during eight years from her husband's death, undisposed of by his will. The money was not received by her as a capitalized part of the inheritance, but as income that had been accumulated during her widow's estate. The widow did not act showing an intention on her part to make this sum of money, the greater part of which she invested in Government securities, part of the family inheritance for the benefit of the heirs. After the lapse of about twenty years, she disposed of it as her own. Held that the money so invested by the widow belonged to her as income derived from her widow's estate, and was subject to her disposition. SADAMANTI DAS v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL. [I. L. Justifying necessity or good grounds, after due inquiry, for belief in its consent among the members of the family depends on proof that the charge was necessary or was believed to be so by the mortgagee after due inquiry. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagee as to her authority. Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded that her power. By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that during the life of his minor son she should not have power to transfer power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts. Held that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid. proving necessity where a Hindu widow attempts to alienate property held by a Hindu widow for her widows' estate.—In order to sustain an alienation of the property held by a Hindu widow for her widows' estate, it must be shown either that there was legal necessity for the alienation or at least that the grantee was led on reasonable ground to believe that there was. In a suit upon a mortgage of such property executed under the authority of a widow borrowing money, the point whether the loan was necessary was expressed in the issues in the form of a question how far the defendants' objections, grounded on the absence of necessity, were tenable. This was obviously an incorrect mode of trying the suit, because it assumed that it was for the defendants to show absence of necessity, and did not accord with the obligation upon a mortgagee, claiming under a widow, to prove a valid mortgage. It was sufficient to defeat the suit that upon the whole case there had been no proof of the lenders having fulfilled the legal obligation to inquire and satisfy himself that the widow, from whom he was taking a charge upon her husband's inheritance, had a proper justification for so charging it. Hannoman Persad v. Aluraj Koonweree, 6 Moore's I. A., 393, referred to. AMARNATH SAI v. ACHAN KVAR [T. L. R., 14 All., 420 [T. L. R., 19 I. A., 196

Adopted son's right to impeach alienation unnecessarily made by his adoptive mother before his adoption—Widow, Alienation by—Alienee from widow bound to inquire if legal necessity for alienation—Evidence—Onus of proving necessity for alienation by the widow.—The plaintiff claimed, as the adopted son of one K, to recover possession of his adoptive father's property, which had been mortgaged by his (K's) widow, H (defendant No. 1), to the third defendant, B, prior to the plaintiff's adoption by her. The property had come into K's possession innumbored with a mortgage effected by her husband, and, in order to redeem that mortgage, she mortgaged the property again to one K. She subsequently paid off K's debt, amounting to Rs. 629, and in 1876 she mortgaged the property for Rs. 999 to B, who was put into possession. In 1881 she adopted the plaintiff, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the property. He contended that H had no power to alienate or mortgage the ancestral immovable property of her deceased husband, and he claimed, as the adopted son of K, to be entitled to the property free from the mortgages or other incumbrances with which H had attempted to charge it. For the defendants it was contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff could not impeach transactions effected by his adoptive mother prior to his adoption. Held that the plaintiff, as the adopted son of K, had a right to impeach the unauthorized transactions of his adoptive mother H, who possessed only a widow's restricted power of alienation. The plaintiff was adopted by H to her husband, who was the last owner of the ancestral property. The plaintiff at once succeeded to that property upon his adoption, and as heir of his adoptive father was entitled to object to any alienation made by H, on the principle that the restrictions upon a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property on payment of such amount only as was raised by H for the purpose of meeting expenses necessarily incurred by her. Held, further, that the onus of proving the necessity for alienation lay upon B. The Court found that there was no evidence that any sum beyond Rs. 629, the amount of K's mortgage, was really required by H, and accordingly directed that the mortgage account should be taken between the plaintiff and B on the footing that the principal of the mortgage-debt was Rs. 629 only, instead of Rs. 999. *LAKSHMAN BHAI KHOPKAR v. Purchaser, Obligation of—Sembla—In purchasing from a Hindu widow the purchaser is not bound to look to the appropriation of the money, nor is he affected by the fact that the alienation was made for a larger sum than the necessity of the case required. Karkinarasah Roy v. Jagadamba Dast. 5 B. L. R., 508.

179. Consent of reversioners—Alienation for worship of idol—A Hindu widow has power, with the consent of the reversionary heirs, to make a valid alienation, for religious purposes, of property, moveable or immovable, left by her husband. Where a Hindu widow dedicated property by deed to the trustees in trust, after the death of the widow to permit the male heirs of her late husband to receive the rents, Held that such heirs were entitled to actual possession and to the rents of the estate, provided they devoted it according to the provisions of the deed to the worship of the idol. Bralamath Bysakh v. Matlal Bysakh. 3 B. L. R., O. C., 92.

180. Gift of moveable property inherited from husband—A Hindu widow who has inherited immovable property from her husband, though possessed of a limited power of alienating portions of such property for necessary purposes or spiritual uses, cannot dispose of a gift in dhanam or kishanjan of the whole of such immovable property without the consent of the heirs of her husband. Bhaskar Tripathi Acharya v. Mahanand Ramji. 6 Bom., O. C., 1.

181. Recital in deed of sale—A recital in a deed of sale by a Hindu widow of her alienated husband's property, setting forth that the alienation was necessary for the purpose of paying his debts, is not of itself evidence of such necessity, nor does the attestation of a relative import his concurrence. Such a transaction may become valid by the consent of the husband's kindred, but the kindred in such case must generally be understood to be all those who are likely to be interested in disputing the transaction. At all events, there ought to be such a concurrence of the members of the family as suffices to raise a presumption that the transaction was a fair one and justified by Hindu law. Rajalakshmi Devi v. Govind Chandra Chowdhary. 13 Moore's I. A., 209.

176. Alienation by widow as administratrix of husband—Presumption of validity—Where a sale of landed property was made by a Hindu widow as administratrix to the estate of her deceased husband, Held that she had power to dispose of the land for any purpose for which as administratrix she might properly do so. Held also that an improper disposal of the property was not to be presumed against a purchaser from her, but that the sale must be taken to be proper and valid, unless it appeared that to the purchaser's knowledge she was for an unlawful purpose converting the estate. Held also that, she having the right to sell as administratrix, it could not be presumed that she sold as a widow. Loganada Mudali v. Kamaswami

177. Grounds supporting charge on the inheritance by a widow for her debt—Obligation of purchaser to show nature of transaction—Necessity—In transactions such as the alienation by a widow of her estate of inheritance derived from her husband, any creditor seeking to enforce a charge on such estate is bound at least to show the nature of the transaction, and to show that in advancing his money he gave credit on reasonable grounds to an assumption that the money was wanted for one of the recognized necessities. The principle is that the lender, although he is not bound to see to the application of the money, and does not lose his rights if, upon bona fide inquiry, he has been deceived as to the existence of the necessity which he had reasonable grounds for supposing to exist, still is under an obligation to do certain things. These are to inquire into the necessity for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the borrower is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. This principle laid down in Hunooman Persaud Pandey v. Baboo Koonwara, 6 Moore's I. A., 392, in regard to the manager for an infant has been applied also to alienations by a widow of her estate of inheritance and to transactions in which a father, in derogation of the rights of his son, under the Mitakshara law, has made an alienation of Gour Mohan Roy* [I. W. R., 48] 196. Pious purposes.—Spiritual necessities.—Although pilgrimages and sacrifices performed by a Hindu widow may be indirectly beneficial to her deceased husband, they are not ceremonies indispensable for his spiritual benefit. A sale by a Hindu widow to raise money for pious acts, not in the nature of spiritual necessities, unless such sale is reasonable in the circumstances of the family and the property sold is but a small portion of the property inherited from her husband, is invalid. Rama v. Ranga [I. L. R., 8 Mad., 552]

197. Pilgrimage.—Where a Hindu, by will, directed that his widow should have power to sell his property for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a pilgrimage, a bond vide purchaser from the widow who, at the time of purchase, believed and had reason to believe that the widow was going on a pilgrimage, and that the property was sold and the money raised for that purpose, is not bound to give back the property at the suit of the reversioners, if there is any evidence that the widow did really go on the pilgrimage. Per GARTH, C.J.—In such a case the purchase would be good even if there were no evidence that the widow

In November 1869, G by deed sub-assigned to H S, in consideration that H S should undertake the maintenance of B and the management of the suit, retaining only five-sixteenths out of the eight-sixteenths assigned to him (G) absolutely. On 19th August 1861, B obtained a decree in the Supreme Court declaring her entitled to the accumulations on her husband's one-fifth share in the estate of his father R C, and to all profits made on such accumulations since her husband's death. In September 1861, G caused judgment to be entered on the bond and execution to be issued, and the sheriff seized and was about to sell B's interest in the estate of her husband. Thereupon, B being entirely without means, P S, brother of H S, paid off G R, and in consideration thereof took an assignment by deed, dated 18th December 1861, in the name of one I S, from B, of five-eighths of the half share reserved to her by the deed of 4th April 1859, but subject to the assignment by that deed to G. On 20th December 1869, H S's share of the accumulations on R C's property at the date of his death, and H S's share of the profits made thereon since her husband's death. P S now sued for a declaration that the deed of 18th December 1861 was binding upon B and the reversionary heirs, and for an order and paid to him out of the moneys paid into Court. At the trial he abandoned his claim against the H S's, and on the ground that he could not prove legal necessity on the part of B. Held the deed could be supported only so far as it charged the profits made since R C's death with the repayment of the H S's advance, with interest at 12 per cent. This suit was dismissed. R subsequently transferred her deceased husband's estate to his daughter I. L sued R and I to enforce the mortgage made to him by R by cancellation of such transfer. Held that the mere fact that the mortgaged property had been transferred to I did not preclude her from contending, as next reversioner, that the mortgage of such property by R was void for want of "legal necessity;" that under the circumstances stated above there was not any "legal necessity," within the meaning of the Hindu law, for such mortgage, and such suit not having been for the benefit of the estate of R's deceased husband, consequently such mortgage was not valid so far as the reversionary right to the mortgaged property as transferred from R was concerned; that, however, I's right to the mortgaged property as transferred from R was subject to such mortgage. The estate was situated in a district in the Presidency of Bombay subject to the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). The plaintiff as reversioner sued for a declaration that the sale was void beyond the lifetime of the widow. Both the lower Courts made the declaration prayed for by the plaintiff, on the ground that there was no necessity for the sale, as the widow might have availed herself of the provisions of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, Held, reversing the lower Courts' decree, that the sale by the widow should be upheld. She was not bound to avail herself of the relief afforded by the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act any more than of the provisions of the Limitation Act. 235. Form of alienation--Sale or mortgage--Necessity.

There is no rule of Hindu law which compels a widow alienating a portion of her late husband's property to have recourse to a mortgage instead of to a sale to raise funds for her maintenance. In a suit by reversioners to set aside a deed of sale by a Hindu widow of part of her husband's estate, on the ground that the money which it was necessary to raise could have been raised by other means, it was held that, if the widow sold a larger portion of the estate than was necessary to raise the amount which the law authorized her to raise, the sale would not be absolutely void as against the reversioners, who could only set it aside by paying the amount which the widow was entitled to raise with interest. Held also that, if a widow elects to sell when it would be more beneficial to mortgage, the sale cannot be set aside, as against the purchaser, if the widow and the purchaser are both acting honestly. *PHOON CHUND LAL v. D sold the shares in mouzali K, and invested the proceeds in another mouzali. In a suit by a son of D's daughter against the purchaser to set aside the sale by D, the Subordinate Judge held that the whole of the purchase-money to the defendant. He further held that the after-acquired property passed by the petition. The High Court upheld the first finding of the Subordinate Judge, but expressed a doubt (it not being necessary to decide the point, as there was no cross-appeal), whether the petition could pass after-acquired property. SHARMA KAI v. BHUWARI BHUWAN SINGH [6 C. L. R., 140]

231. Suit to set aside alienation--Validity of alienation.

Where a Hindu brought up a boy, and treating him as his son, purchased estates for, and in the name of, such son, but subsequently for some reason got his wife's name recorded in respect of such estates, Held that, if the record of name in favour of the wife was effected during the minority of the son, it was invalid, or if otherwise, then the wife must be considered as having derived her title from the son and not from her husband, and in either case she was competent to transfer it to the son, and under such circumstances the transfer made by her was not illegal under the Hindu law. Now BUR KAI v. BHAGWAN [2 Agr., 5]

232. Alienation in contemplation of adoption.

The power of a Hindu widow, to make with authority from her husband to adopt, to make bond side alienations which would be binding on the reversioners if no adoption took place, is not affected or curtailed by the fact that it is exercised in contemplation of adoption and in defiance of the right of the son who is about to be adopted. LAKSHMANA KAI v. LAKSHMANA [1 L. R., 4 Mad., 160]

233. Alienation by conditional sale--Right to question validity of sale.

A conditional sale is an alienation, the validity of which a reversioner to a Hindu widow is by Hindu law entitled to question. ODIT NARAIN SINGH v. DHARM MAHATOON [5 W. R., 1864, 263]

234. Sale without legal necessity--Reversioners.

A Hindu, had two daughters by his wife K. One daughter married S and died in K's lifetime, leaving two sons, the defendants. The death of her husband, K succeeded to his estate and sold some land to S without adequate necessity. S mortgaged this land to T. Held, in a suit by T after the death of S and K against the defendants to enforce the terms of the mortgage, that the defendants were entitled to object to the validity of the sale to their father by K, in their own right, in answer to T's claim. The restrictions on the father's power to alienate ancestral property are incidents of co-parcenary, whereas the right to sell possessed by a widow is but a qualified power given for certain specified purposes over the reversion created by law in favour of the ultimate male heirs. *KARUPPA THEVAR v. Payment of money out of Court to Hindu widow—Reversers

A decree was made in favour of K, a Hindu widow, in a suit brought by her against B C, which declared that she was entitled to one-fifth share of the accumulation of the estate of her husband, to be held by her as a Hindu widow, and to one-fifth of the subsequent accumulations absolutely. Execution of the decree was taken out, and the sum to which K was declared entitled was paid into Court by B C in March 1869. Macpherson, J., in delivering judgment, expressed a doubt whether the suit was brought for the benefit of the plaintiff, and stated that he would consider any application to protect any rights the reversionary heirs might have in the amount received by the plaintiff. No steps, however, were taken by B C, by suit or otherwise, to protect the interests of the reversionary heirs in the sum paid into Court, but on K's applying in March 1871 to have the money paid to her out of Court, B C, on behalf of himself as reversionary heir, filed an affidavit in opposition to K's application, charging her on information and belief with leading an immoral life, and of having assigned half the amount in Court to H S, and expressing his apprehension of waste, and that, if the money were allowed to be taken out of Court, it would be lost to the reversioners. Held that K was entitled to have the money paid out of Court to her.

died in 1808, leaving five sons, and possessed of considerable property. In 1813, the four younger sons obtained a decree for partition against their elder brother, but themselves continued to live together as a joint Hindu family, and so did their widows after their death. After the death of the widow of one of the brothers, J D, the widow of another brother, brought a suit for partition; but subsequently, by the consent of all parties, the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration, and an award was made as follows: "Selling their (the widows') respective riyati land, bati, or house, they will pay the costs of their respective shares; in that way the land, bati, or house that shall remain, with the proceeds belonging to their respective shares, the raiment and food of C D (the widow of another brother) and J D will be supplied during their lives; they will be unable to make a gift, sale, etc.; should the proceeds of the land, bati, or house not be sufficient for their food and raiment and for the purity of their respective husbands in a suitable manner, the jetti dharma, then showing good reason, regulation, conformably to the dharma shastra what is expedient as necessary according to usage, informing the other shareholders, they shall be able to sell the riyati land, bati, or house of their respective shares." This award, which directed a partition according to the terms of a chintnamah, or written description of the land, which was executed by all the parties, was made a rule of Court on 26th July 1858. J D took possession of her husband's share of the estate, some portion of which she alienated. In a suit brought by the reversionary heirs against J D and the purchasers of what she had sold, it was alleged that the alienations were without necessity and contrary to the award, and it was prayed that they might be declared void as against the reversionary heirs, and that J D might be restrained from further alienations. Held that the suit could be maintained in the lifetime of J D. As there was no waste proved, the prayer for an injunction to restrain further alienation was refused. *Karikarnasab Roy v. ## 5. HUSBAND AND WIFE—concluded.

Onus of proof—Benami transaction.—A Hindu wife living with her husband brought a suit on a deed of mortgage executed in her favour. Held that to enforce her rights under the deed she need not join her husband. That it is not necessary for her to show by evidence that she has separate property or separate business. That in Hindu law there is no presumption that transactions which stand in the name of the wife are the husband's transactions. MANADA SUNDARI DABI v. MANANDA SARAKAR [12 C. W. N., 367]

17. Deed of separation—Agreement without consideration—Contract Act (I) of 1872, s. 25 (i).—By a registered deed executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, his wife, after reciting certain quarrels and disagreements, none of which indicated such a condition of affairs as would warrant the wife, under the Hindu Law, in claiming a separate residence and maintenance from her husband, he promised to pay her for a separate residence and maintenance. On a suit by the wife for arrears of maintenance due, Held that there was no consideration moving from the wife, for the promise by the husband, and the present suit could not be maintained. That s. 25 of the Contract Act did not apply, the consideration of natural love and affection being directly opposed to the recitals in the document. RATUKH DABE v. BHOOE NATH MOOKERJEE . . . 4 C. W. 22. Law in Guzerat.—Priority—Registration—Notice.—The rule of Hindu law that a mortgage with possession takes precedence of a mortgage of a prior date, but unaccompanied by possession, does not apply to Guzerat. Where in Guzerat the defendant, a pious mortgagee, in possession had notice of plaintiff's prior mortgage, the defendant was held not entitled to claim the benefit of the above rule of Hindu law. Registration could not of itself alter this rule of Hindu law except so far as effect may be given to it by statute, and registration secures the same object which the Hindu law intended to secure by requiring possession, viz., notice to subsequent incumbrancers of the existence of a prior incumbrance. TONABAI DAYABAI v. RAJJI JAGA . . . 11 Bom., 41

9. NECESSARIES.

23. Power of widow entitled to maintenance to bind heir for necessities.—There is no rule of Hindu law which recognizes any authority in a widow entitled only to maintenance to make contracts for necessary supplies binding upon the heir in possession of the family property and liable to maintain her. ## 10. PLEDGE.

24. Accidental destruction of property pledged.—By the Hindu as well as by the English law, a creditor in whose hands a pledge has accidentally perished is notwithstanding entitled to recover his debt in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. By Hindu law a promissory note does not import consideration, and therefore, where it was proved that the defendant actually received only Rs. 700, that sum was all the plaintiff was allowed to recover. (5) Whether the illatam can demand partition. HANUMANTAKA v. RAMI REDDI [I. L. R., 4 Mad., 272]

18. Rights of succession in his natural family.—Under the custom of illatam (affiliation of a son-in-law) which obtains amongst the Reddis or Peridra Kapu caste of Vellore, the illatam son-in-law does not thereby lose his rights of succession to the estate of his natural father's divided brother. BALAKRISHN REDDI v. PERIA REDDI [I. L. R., 6 Mad., 267]

19. Illatam adoption.—Inheritance.—There is no evidence that the custom of illatam adoption exists among the Kondarazu caste of the Vizagapatnam district. NARASIMHA KAZU v. VENKATASWAMY KAZU [I. L. R., 17 Mad., 287]

4. APPOINTMENT OF DAUGHTER.

20. Power to appoint daughter.—Onus of proof.—Delegation of power.—The custom of Hindu law, under which a father, in default of male issue, might appoint a daughter to be as a son, or appoint her to raise a son for him, if not obsolete, as appears to be the opinion of the text-writers, is one which in modern times does not seem to have been brought under the consideration of the Courts of justice in India. Assuming the custom to exist, inasmuch as it breaks in upon the general rules of succession, whoever claims by virtue of it to succeed as heir must bring himself clearly within it. There seems to be no sufficient authority for holding that a father may delegate the power to appoint. JITENDRA SINGH v. COURT OF WARD. [15 B. L. R., 190]

23. Powers of the head of a caste in respect of caste customs.—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—In a matter relating to caste customs over which the ecclesiastical chief has jurisdiction, and exercises his jurisdiction with due care and in conformity to the usage of caste, the Civil Courts cannot interfere. A guru as head of a caste has jurisdiction to deal with all matters relating to the autonomy of caste according to recognized caste customs. *The Queen v. Sankar, I. L. 24. Disherison in favour of son-in-law.—Reddi caste.—Illegal custom.—The custom of the Reddi caste, according to which a father-in-law may disinherit his heir in favour of a son-in-law, is bad. THAYUMANA REDDI v. PERUMAL CHETTI [1 Mad., 51]

8. ENDOWMENTS.

25. Principle to be observed in dealing with Hindu endowments.—Evidence of custom.—The important principle to be observed by the Courts in dealing with the constitution and rules of religious brotherhoods attached to Hindu temples is to ascertain, if possible, the special laws and usages governing the particular community whose affairs have become the subject of litigation and to be guided by them. The custom and practice in such matters is to be proved by testimony. A zamindar claiming a customary right to grant confirmation of the election of a moujunt must prove the custom; an acknowledgment, taken in troubled times from the guardian of an infant moujunt, of a zamindar's customary right to control and remove the moujunt, is entitled to little, if any, weight as evidence of the custom. MUTTU RAMAIAH SETHUPATI v. PERIA-NAYAGAM PILLAI. [I. L. R., 1 I. A., 209]

26. Dancing girls attached to a temple inheritance.—Temple endowment.—Succession to the office of a dancing girl connected with such temple.—Public policy.—Right of suit.—The existence in India of dancing-girls in connection with Hindu temples is according to the ancient established usage, and the Court would not be justified in refusing to recognize existing endowments in connection with such an institution. Suit to declare existence of—Hereditary office with endowments or emoluments attached, Suit to establish right to.—The suit was brought by a dancing girl to establish her right to the mistress of dancing girls in a certain pagoda and to be put in possession of the said mistress with the honours and perquisites attached thereto as set forth in schedules to the plaint annexed. The defendants denied the claim. The District Munsif, finding that the claim had been established, decreed for plaintiff, but on appeal by the first defendant, the District Judge dismissed the suit on the authority of *Chinnu Ummayy v. virtue only of its impartibility, in the absence of proof of a custom having the force of law, or of some tenure attaching to the zamindari, rendering it inalienable. *I. L. R., 10 All., 272, a case which is applicable in Madras, decides that where there is an impartible estate descending by primogeniture, and in other respects the Mitakshara governs the rights of the parties, the eldest son does not become a co-sharer with his father, and decides that the inalienability of the estate would depend upon custom which must be proved, or in some cases upon the nature of the tenure attaching to the zamindari. Held that there was no proof in this case of a custom which the Courts could recognize as having the force of law, not resting on the Mitakshara, but argued to have been established by a long course of decision in the Madras Courts, against the validity of absolute alienation of an impartible zamindari. Held also that this was not a case to which should be applied the doctrine that where there is a long course of decision, that course should be supported, and the law not altered. And held that, inasmuch as here there was no co-parcenary subsisting between the zamindar and any member of his family in the estate, the zamindar had power to alienate it, and that he might exercise that power by will. 47. Family customs—Primogeniture—Evidence of conveyings probated.—In a Rajput family, of a clan named Jadon Thakur, long settled near Agra, holding an ancestral taluk of zamindari villages, and having their principal dwelling-place in one of such villages, the question arose whether, by a family custom, their ancestral property descended as an impartible estate, or descended as an ordinary estate, under the Hindu law, to be held jointly by the sons, each having the right to claim partition. The second of a joint family of three sons now sued the elder, the youngest being a co-defendant, but not taking either side. The evidence established a family custom that the ancestral property should descend as an impartible estate, and should be possessed by a single heir at a time, who should be possessed by the eldest son. All the lines of evidence, converging towards the same result, the existence of this custom of impartibility, and of primogeniture. Perhaps no one of these lines, taken alone, would have been conclusive in question was how far the general law was superseded, and whether the right of the son to control the father's act in this respect was beyond the custom. Held that in regard to impartible estate the sons' right at birth did not exist where there was no right on his part to partition; also that inalienability depended on custom or on the nature of the tenure. In this case, the evidence did not establish that by custom the estate was inalienable. SARTAJ KUMAR v. DEORAJ KUMAR I. L. R., 10 All., 272 [L. R., 15 I. A., 51]

43. Impartible raj—Custom of inalienability, Evidence of—Right of possessor of impartible estate to alienate—Dayad patta.—The holder of the impartible palayam of Annay-anayakur transferred his estate to his wife by a deed of gift. The transferee had besides a son named Annayakur, and some of the latter now sued for a declaration that the gift was not binding on them. The law of succession admittedly applicable to this palayam was the rule of dayad patta, according to which the person entitled to succeed on the death of a palayagar is the senior in age of his dayads, descended from one of three brothers who originally formed a joint family together and were the founders of three lines in the family. The person entitled under this rule to inherit on the death of the transferor was one of the plaintiffs in the suit. It was contended that the palayagar had no proprietary right in the estate, but held the office of manager merely; but this contention was overruled. It was further contended that the estate admittedly impartible was by custom inalienable also. Held on the oral and other evidence adduced in the case, and with reference to admissions made by the transferor and to his conduct, and on its appearing that eight out of the nine predecessors of the transferor had left either sons or widows, but nevertheless that for three centuries there had been no sale or gift, that the custom of inalienability was established, and that the gift in question was accordingly invalid as against the plaintiffs. *Sartaj Kumar v. In 1890, the plaintiffs, who were divided collateral heirs of H., sued to recover the lands, alleging that they succeeded thereto on the death of M., widows and daughters being excluded from inheritance according to the custom among the Ghol Girsias. The lower Courts found that the lands were never in plaintiffs' possession; that M. held them till December 1882, since which time defendants 1-3 had them in their enjoyment as purchasers from her; that the custom proved excluded daughters, but not widows, from inheritance; and that the claim was within time, having been made within twelve years of the death of M. On second appeal to the High Court, held (1) that the alleged custom excluding daughters was not proved; (2) that the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to shift the basis of their claim from an alleged custom which excluded both widows and daughters to one which only excluded daughters; (3) that since limitation must be applied to the plaintiff's claim as they made it, and tried to prove it, M.'s possession was adverse to them, and, being for more than twelve years, barred the suit. *Basava v. 58. Law applicable to Khoja Mahomedans, Bombay.—It must be considered as the settled rule in Bombay that in the absence of sufficient evidence of usages to the contrary the Hindu law is applicable in matters relating to property, inheritance, and succession among Khoja Mahomedans, and this rule was held to apply in a case of Khojas at Thana, no evidence having been given in that case to show its inapplicability to the Khojas of that place. SHIVJI HASAM v. DATU MAVJI KHODA . 12 Bom., 281

59. Succession—Letters of administration.—In the absence of satisfactory proof of a custom, differing from the Hindu law, the Courts of this Presidency apply to Khojas the Hindu law of inheritance and succession. If a custom opposed to Hindu law be alleged to exist amongst Khojas, the burden of proof rests upon the person setting up that custom. The Khojas, having been originally Hindus and converted from the Hindu religion by a daj, or mission-ary of the Imam of the Ismailis, to the Mahomedan religion of the Shia, division and Imamism sub-division, and being partly regulated by Mahomedan law, partly by Hindu law, and partly by custom, occupy a position so peculiar that the Courts do not apply to them, when seeking to prove a custom of inheritance or succession, differing from the Hindu law, the stringent rule that the custom must be proved to be ancient, invariable, and submitted to as legally binding, but will act upon satisfactory evidence that it has been the general custom and accepted as such by the great majority of the Khoja community. A Khoja, having died intestate and without leaving issue, was survived by his mother (a widow), his wife, and a married sister. Held that, according to the custom of the Khojas, his mother was entitled to the management of his estate and therefore to letters of administration in preference to his wife or his sister. 5. ————— Public charity—

Trust—Public charitable or religious trust—Offerings made to an idol—Liability of persons in possession of an idol's property—Account.—A trust for a Hindu idol and temple is to be regarded in India as one created "for public charitable purposes" within the meaning of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). The Hindu law recognizes not only corporate bodies with rights of property vested in the corporation apart from its individual members, but also the juridical persons or subjects called foundations. A Hindu who wishes to establish a religious or charitable institution may, according to his law, express his purpose and endow it, and the ruler will give effect to the bounty, or at least protect it. A trust is not required for this purpose as it is by English law. Those who take charge of gifts made to a religious or charitable institution—whether such gifts consist of cash, jewels, or land—incur thereby a responsibility for their due application to the purposes of the institution. They are answerable as trustees would be, even though they have not consciously accepted a trust; and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by a suit open to any one interested as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio. *MANOHAR GANESH TAMBekar v. 28. ———— Proprietorship of endowed property—Religious communities at Benares and Tirpuntal, Status of.—The mohunt of the muth at Tirpuntal, zillah Tanjore, in the Madras Presidency, sued the mohunt of the muth at Benares in the Civil Court of Zillah Benares for the right to manage as proprietor the muth and chutter affairs at Benares and the temple of Sri Kedareshur, and to recover property belonging thereto, and to have an account of receipts and disbursements relative to the same; such relief being claimed by virtue of his proprietary right as mohunt and guddeenashin of the head-quarters muth at Tirpuntal under whose jurisdiction and power the chutter institution at Benares had continued from time immemorial. The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim to the immoveable property and endowment which he represented as acquired by his ancestors, the mohunt guddeenashins at Benares and himself. He denied that he was an agent, and claimed to be the real proprietor in possession and occupation by right of succession to his ancestors. The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. The High Court modified the decree, giving the plaintiff possession of certain chutters and gardens built or purchased out of funds remitted from Madras, and declaring him entitled to an account of a sum admitted to have been remitted from Tirpuntal, but holding that he had failed to make out possession of the muth, temple, or other property. Held that the original foundation having been admittedly at Benares, which is the holy place, and the object having been to afford to persons, either resident in the south of India or making pilgrimage to Benares, facilities for worship and religious duties there, raised a presumption that the establishment at Tirpuntal was subordinate to that at Benares. And that it was not shown that any change had been effected in the original constitution of the community. Held that the nature of the relation between the muths at Tirpuntal and Benares was that the former fed the establishment at the latter, the object of which was to afford facilities to pilgrims and others wishing to pay their devotions at Benares. The result was that the establishment at Tirpuntal collected alms and remitted them to Benares, producing complicated exchange transactions between the

The superintending authority over religious endowments exercised by the old rulers of the country passed to the British Government, and Madras Regulation VII of 1817 merely defined the manner in which that power was to be thenceforth exercised. *MUTTU RAMALINGA SETUPATI v. 28. ——— Proprietorship of endowed property—Religious communities at Benares and Tirpuntal, Status of.—The mohunt of the muth at Tirpuntal, zillah Tanjore, in the Madras Presidency, sued the mohunt of the muth at Benares in the Civil Court of Zillah Benares for the right to manage as proprietor the muth and chutter affairs at Benares and the temple of Sri Kedareshur, and to recover property belonging thereto, and to have an account of receipts and disbursements relative to the same; such relief being claimed by virtue of his proprietary right as mohunt and guddeenashin of the head-quarters muth at Tirpuntal under whose jurisdiction and power the chutter institution at Benares had continued from time immemorial. The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim to the immoveable property and endowment which he represented as acquired by his ancestors, the mohunt guddeenashins at Benares and himself. He denied that he was an agent, and claimed to be the real proprietor in possession and occupation by right of succession to his ancestors. The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. The High Court modified the decree, giving the plaintiff possession of certain chutters and gardens built or purchased out of funds remitted from Madras, and declaring him entitled to an account of a sum admitted to have been remitted from Tirpuntal, but holding that he had failed to make out possession of the muth, temple, or other property. Held that the original foundation having been admittedly at Benares, which is the holy place, and the object having been to afford to persons, either resident in the south of India or making pilgrimage to Benares, facilities for worship and religious duties there, raised a presumption that the establishment at Tirpuntal was subordinate to that at Benares. And that it was not shown that any change had been effected in the original constitution of the community. Held that the nature of the relation between the muths at Tirpuntal and Benares was that the former fed the establishment at the latter, the object of which was to afford facilities to pilgrims and others wishing to pay their devotions at Benares. The result was that the establishment at Tirpuntal collected alms and remitted them to Benares, producing complicated exchange transactions between the representative of G in 1873 to establish his claim to the office held by T's sons, it was contended on behalf of plaintiff, in answer to defendant's plea of limitation, that in the absence of evidence of the circumstances under which T succeeded to the pātilship, T must be presumed to have been nominated to that office by all the members of the watandar family jointly, or with their assent sought and granted, and was consequently the representative of all of them. Held that the succession of a son to his father in an hereditary office is primarily to be referred to a right based on the relation subsisting between them just as would be the son's succession to his father's property. GIRIAPA v. 38. Succession to office and property of deceased mohunt—Custom of institution.—In determining the right of succession to the property left by the deceased head of a religious institution, the only law to be observed is to be found in custom and practice, which must be proved by evidence. On the death of a mohunt, the right to succeed to his landed and other property was contested between two goshains. Held that the claimant, in order to succeed, must prove the custom of the math entitling him to recover the office and the property appertaining to it. The evidence showed the custom to be that the title to succeed to the office and property was dependent on the successor's having been the chela approved and nominated as such by the late mohunt, and also after the death of the latter installed or confirmed as mohunt by the other goshains of the sect. Held that a claimant who failed to prove his installation or confirmation was not entitled to a decree for the office and property against a person alleging himself to have been a chela who, whether with or without title, was in possession. GENDA PURI v. was founded by a member of the adhinam. Many previous heads of the muth had agreed to be "slaves" of the head of the adhinam, but for over 60 years the head of the adhinam had exercised no management over the endowments belonging to the muth; and in a suit (compromised) of the year 1874 the present pretensions of the head of the muth were denied in toto. The defendant had been nominated to the management of the muth under the will of his predecessor, dated the same year, and was not a disciple of the adhinam. Held (1) that the muth was affiliated to the adhinam, but the head of the adhinam is not entitled to appoint to the office of head of the math and was not entitled to an order for delivery of the property of the math to himself or to his appointee; (2) that on the evidence as to the usage in the establishments in question, the head of the math was entitled to appoint his successor, but his election was limited to members of the adhinam; and the head of the adhinam was entitled to enforce this rule, though he was bound to invest a disciple properly nominated by the head of the math; (3) that the defendant not being a disciple of the adhinam, his appointment was invalid, and the head of the adhinam was entitled to see that a competent member of the adhinam was appointed in his stead. GIYANA SAMBANDHA PANDARA SANNADHI v. The three brothers then for some years managed the estate as shebait, and the survivor of them was succeeded by his son, one of the defendants in the present suit, which was brought by the testator's only daughter as heiress to his estate, claiming that the Court should determine "those provisions which were valid and lawful, and those which were invalid and illegal." She claimed possession and an account, and also to be the shebait. Held that the plaintiff's claim to a preferential title to this office depended on a sentence in the will constituting, as construed by the Courts below, to be shebait the senior in age of the heirs of the original shebait, the defendant now holding the office coming within this provision according to the judgments of both Courts. 45. ————— Succession to the office of dharmakarta—Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Religious endowments—Custom and usage.—On a question of the right of succession to the office of dharmakarta of a devasthanam or temple at Rameswaram in Madura (and in such cases the only law applicable is the custom and practice, which are to be proved by evidence), both the Courts below found that, according to the established usage, the succession was provided for by each successive dharmakarta initiating a pandaram, and, whilst in office, appointing him as his successor. It followed that the appointment of a dharmakarta by one who had already ceased to hold the office (having been removed under Act XX of 1863, s. 14) was not in accordance with usage, and was therefore invalid. The person whom the displaced dharmakarta had attempted to appoint was head of the muth from which preceding dharmakartas, as it appeared, had been taken. Besides the above cause of invalidity in the appointment in question, the evidence supported the finding that the displaced dharmakarta made his attempt to appoint the head of the muth to succeed him in office in furtherance of his own interests, and did not bona fide exercise his powers, if any. This finding invalidated the whole appointment and applied to the headship of the muth as well as to the office of dharmakarta. RAMALINGAM PILLAI v. VETHILINGAM PILLAI . I. L. 47. ————— Succession as mohant of a muth at Puri—Custom—Right of a chela—Alleged disqualification of mohant to take a chela by reason of being a leper.—Two rival claimants contested the right to succeed to the office of mohant of a mourasi muth under a customary rule of succession. Both the Courts below found that the mohant for the time being had power to appoint his successor from among his chelas; that, in the absence of appointment, a chela, or, if there should be more than one, the eldest chela, would succeed; and that, should there be no chela, then a gurubhai or chela of the same guru with the deceased mohant would succeed. The plaintiff's case was that he had been duly taken as a chela and appointed by the last mohant, whose title was not disputed. The defendant, who was in possession, denied that the plaintiff had ever been such a chela, alleging that, even if the last mohant had attempted to take him as a chela, this act would have been invalid by reason of that mohant having been a leper. The defendant's title was that he had been taken as a chela by the mohant who had preceded the last, and had been in a position to dispute the right of succession, but had yielded it when the last mohant had taken office. He put forward an alleged will of the latter, which stated that he was to succeed, and relied on his possession approved by other mohants. Held that only a leprosy of virulent form could have disqualified the last mohant. As to it, there was no medical evidence; but on the facts the conclusion was that there had been no such disqualification. The statements in the alleged will were not true, and it was ineffectual to alter the title, whether the last mohant had executed it or not, having no testamentary effect; also what had been done after the death of the last mohant could not deprive the plaintiff or entitle the defendant, there being no custom to authorize the choice of a mohant in that way. BHAGABAN RAMANUJ DAS v. worship, there being no proof of any usage at variance with this presumption, but the custom appearing to be in accordance with it. Held that the plaintiff, as such representative of the founder was entitled in preference to a collaterally descended member of the founder's family, to claim the shebaitship. Also that the plaintiff was entitled, in that character, to the possession of a portrait which had been by the same founder dedicated to this worship. But that he had no right to a temple in which the portrait was kept, this temple having been given by one of the worshippers (for the location of the Sri Sri Iswar Joshi) with the condition annexed that the defendant should be shebait. The plaintiff accordingly could not claim possession of this temple, as it could only have been accepted as a gift upon the donor's terms, and this condition prevailed notwithstanding that the temple had been in part paid for by subscription among the worshippers, there being no evidence that the latter did not know of it or had paid their money with any reference to the question who was to be shebait. Gossami Sri Gnidharini v Romanlalji Gosami L. The plaintiff obtained a decree, which was, however, made contingent upon his assuming the character of a sannyasi within the period of four months. therefore, a mohunt who once nominates his successor has no right to give directions to his successor, when his turn to nominate comes, as to whom he should nominate. Fourthly, that the testator having no power to give any directions as to the person who should be L's successor, L was entitled, after he had succeeded to the guddi, to appoint as his successor a person other than G. Fifthly, that even if by custom a power to appoint two mohunts in succession had been established, still under the words of the will a discretion would have been left to L in the choice of his successor, and he would not have been bound to appoint G. It seems that in a suit for the recovery of an elective mohuntship to which the plaintiff claims to be mohunt, but does not show that he was elected, but merely that the defendant was not elected or was irregularly elected, the Court ought to dismiss the suit, and has no jurisdiction to direct a new election. Held by the Privy Council on appeal that the will did not give G an absolute, positive, unqualified right at any time to the mohuntship, even on the incapacity of L to perform the duties of mohunt; that until L became incapable, no trust or duty was created; that even when he became incapable, it was no more than a gift in the nature of a precatory trust. Held also on the evidence that G had failed to establish his own title to be mohunt, and that the suit was so framed that in it he could not recover the mohuntship on the mere infirmity of defendant's title. The only law as to mohunts and their offices is to be found in custom and practice which is to be proved by evidence. There cannot be two existing mohunts, and the office cannot be held jointly. GREEDHAREE DOSS v. NUNDOKISHORE DOSS Marsh., 573:2 Hay, 633

The succession to muths or religious endowments must be regulated in each case by the nature of the endowment and the rule of succession prescribed by the founder of the institution, and if this rule cannot be discovered from the original deed of gift or other documentary evidence, it must be proved in each case by showing what the usage has been on the occasion of each succession. of a maurasi muth, by a deed of gift in 1849, made over all the property of the muth to his senior chela and invested him with the chudder of mohunti; but subsequently a dispute having arisen on account of the immoral life led by the appointee, a compromise was effected, by which the former mohunt was permitted to take back the muth and the property belonging to it, the other being allowed merely to retain possession of a subordinate muth. In 1873 the mohunt died, leaving a will, dated 6th May 1873, by which he appointed the defendant his successor. The original appointee thereupon obtained his own confirmation as mohunt at a Bandhara ceremony by the neighbouring mohunt, and brought a suit against the defendant, who was in possession for recovery of possession of the muth and the properties belonging thereto, relying on the deed of gift of 1849. Held that, the muth being maurasi, the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, there being no reason why the deed of gift should not be considered to have been cancelled by the compromise or by the will. He resided at Nathdwar within the territories of the Rana of Udepur in Mewar. Part of the dedicated property was at Poona. The first four defendants managed this portion of the property for the plaintiff. They collected the rents and transmitted them to him from time to time. In 1876 the Rana deposed the plaintiff for alleged misconduct, deposed him from his territories, and proclaimed the plaintiff's son (defendant No. 5) as Tekait Maharaj. The defendant having refused to pay over the rents and to deliver the Poona property to the plaintiff, the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover possession. The plaintiff's son was made a co-defendant on his own application. On behalf of the defendant it was contended that the right of succession to a shebaitship was not governed by the ordinary rules of inheritance, and that the plaintiff had no title thereto. Held that a Hindu widow could not succeed to a shebaitship as heir to her husband without proof of special custom. The firm in Bombay was carried on under the name of N P, and the house in which it was carried on was built with moneys belonging to the shrine. On the 8th May 1876, by order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the Maharana of Oodeypore, he was deposed from that office for alleged misconduct and deported from Nathdwara. In his place his son, the plaintiff, was placed on the gadi as high priest. In 1878 the plaintiff brought this suit praying for a declaration that as high priest of the shrine he was entitled to the property in Bombay belonging thereto, and for delivery of the same to him, and for an injunction against the defendant, and for a receiver, etc. He obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from receiving or dealing with the moneys of the said firm of N P and from tampering with the books, etc. Held, discharging the rule, that the plaintiff had shown no title to the property in question. Oodeypore. It is held in great veneration by the Vaishnava sect of Hindus, and is extremely wealthy. The plaintiff held the position of Maharaja of Nathdwara (Tikait Maharaja) up to the year 1876, and as such sat on the gadi and managed the property of the said shrine. In that year, however, he was deposed from his position by the principal authorities of Oodeypore and deported from Nathdwara, and his son, the second defendant, was raised to the gadi in his place. Since that time the plaintiff had never been permitted to go back, nor had he had anything to do with the shrine. The second defendant (his son) had since his elevation performed the worship and managed the property belonging to the shrine. The plaintiff, however, claimed in this suit to be still the legal owner and representative of the shrine, and as such entitled to the house in question and to the rents and profits thereof since the death of C. The first defendant was one of the trustees named in the will of C, to whom the house was bequeathed in trust. The plaintiff in his plaint also contended that the clause in C's will, giving the said trustees a right to reside in the house free of rent, was ultra vires of the power of appointment given to her by the will of her husband. The defendants denied that since his deposition the plaintiff was the legal owner and representative of the shrine of Shri Nathji. They contended that, having been deposed and deported from Nathdwara, he could no longer apply the rents to the support of the shrine, and that, if the house were given to him, the trusts of C's will would be defeated. They contended that the second defendant,

If he was regarded as owner of that property, he had not lost his right as such to the said property in consequence of his deposition, and if he was merely a trustee, he had not been removed from his office by any competent tribunal. If a purchaser from such mohunt retained possession after the mohunt's death, the successor to the guddi would have a cause of action against him from the date of the election; and no length of possession during the vendor's lifetime would give the purchaser a valid title as against the present mohunt. BURM SUROOP DASS v. 85. ——— Effect of alienation—Necessity for alienation.—Under the Hindu law, a permanent alienation by a shebait of endowed property, such as the creation of a patni, is not absolutely null and void. A permanent alienation by a shebait of endowed property under special circumstances of necessity is valid. Want of funds for repairing the temple and restoring the image of the idol is a necessity sufficient under the Hindu law to warrant such an alienation. TAYUBUNISSA BIBI v. SHAM KISHORE ROY

86. ——— Effect of alienation—Decree obtained against shebait—Res judicata.—As a general rule of Hindu law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of charities connected with it is inalienable. It is competent, however, for the shebait in charge of property dedicated to the worship of an idol, in his capacity of shebait and as manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks, and other like objects. The power to incur such debts is to be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them, the authority of the shebait being in this respect analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir. It being competent for a shebait to borrow money for necessary purposes, it follows that judgments obtained against a former shebait in respect of debts so incurred are binding upon succeeding shebaites, who form a continuing representation of the debutter property. But before applying the principle of res judicata to such judgments, the Court should be satisfied that the judgments relied upon are untainted by fraud or collusion, and that the necessary and proper issues have been raised, tried, and decided in the suits which led to them. Execution of such judgments should be decreed only against the rents and profits of the debutter property. PROSUNNO KUMARI DEBYA v. GOLAB CHAND BABOO . . . 14 B. L. R., 450 [23 W. R., 253; L. 87. ——— Purchaser of endowed property, Notice to—Evidence of necessity for alienation.—A plaintiff who seeks to set aside an alienation of lands on the ground that they are debutter, i.e., dedicated in perpetuity to support the worship of an idol, must give strong and clear evidence of the endowment. The mere fact that the rents of a particular mehal have been applied for a considerable period to the worship of an idol is not sufficient proof that the mehal is debutter. The shebait or manager of a debutter estate has authority, where the purposes of the endowment require it, to raise money by alienating a part of the estate, his position being analogous to that of a manager of an infant heir under the Hindu law. The written conveyance of certain lands stated them to be debutter, and to be alienated to raise money to repair the temple of the idol. In a suit to set aside the alienation, it appeared that at the time of the transaction the temple required repairs, but that the vendor had not applied the whole of the purchase-money to that purpose. There being no evidence of any collusion on the part of the purchaser, or that he was aware at the time of the purchase that the money was to be applied otherwise than the conveyance expressed,—Held that the sale was valid.

112. ———— Religious endowments—Mortgage of endowed property by de facto manager—Debt binding on the institution.—In a suit on a mortgage, dated April 1880, and comprising lands forming part of the endowment of a muth, it appeared that the mortgagor had been the rightful manager of the muth until 1876 when he was ousted, and consequently forfeited his office. The present defendant was appointed in 1877 to succeed him in the office of manager, but the mortgagor remained nevertheless in possession, and a suit by the present defendant to eject him was pending at the date of the mortgage. The plaintiff now sought to enforce his rights under the mortgage against the defendant and the property of which the defendant had been placed in possession as the result of the suit above referred to. Per Curiam.—The mortgagor was not disentitled to incur expenses so as to bind the rightful manager by the mere fact that the former was not de jure manager at the time the expenses were incurred, provided they were incurred for the preservation of the trust property or other justifiable purposes. On its appearing that the debt was incurred for the conduct of ceremonies in which the mortgagor, after his excommunication, was disqualified from taking part, and that all the circumstances of the case were known to the mortgagee,—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount of the mortgage-debt. KASIM SAIBA v. 113. ———— Hereditary managers—Void alienation—Adverse possession.—The hereditary managers of the property with which a religious foundation was endowed had purported to sell and assign the management and lands of the endowment to the representative of another institution, the first defendant's predecessor. Held that, there not being any custom of the foundation allowing such an assignment, it was beyond their legal competence, conveying no title. Turmah Talia v. Rari Turmah Mulha, I. R., 4 I. A., 76; I. L. R., 1 Mad., 235. referred to and followed. The possession delivered to the purchaser was adverse to the vendors. After the twelve years' period of limitation, which expired in the lifetime of the vendor, whose son now sued to recover the hereditary managership and possession of the lands of the endowment, the suit was barred under Limitation Act XV of 1877. Held that there was no distinction between the claim to the office and the claim for the property in regard to the application of art. 124 of sch. II of the Act and of s. 28. If there were, art. 144 would apply to the claim for the property. In order to fix the starting point for limitation at a date later than that of the transfer, it was contended that the office and title were held in successive life-estates. If that contention had been right, the period of limitation would have commenced at the death of the plaintiff's father. The judicial committee were of opinion that it must be assumed that the origin of the endowment was by gift from the founder, and that, in accordance with the ruling in Juttendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore,

the terms of the gift, or sale, entitled to possession, there is no reason why such gift or sale, though not accompanied by possession, whether of moveable or immovable property (where the gift or sale is not of such a nature as would make the giving effect to it to be contrary to public policy), should not operate to give the donee, or vendee, a right to obtain possession.

KALIDAS MULLICK v. KANHAYA LAL PUNDIT

12. Construction of deed of gift—Gift with possession.—S, on 23rd September 1874, executed an instrument of gift in favour of his two daughters and his adopted son, whereby he gave them "his houses and shops and other moveable and immovable property and his loan transactions" in equal one-third shares. At this time he was possessed of a one-third share in a certain partnership business. After the death of S, M, one of the daughters, sued N, the adopted son, for one-third of her father's property including his share in the partnership business. Held that, inasmuch as the donor had relinquished the subject of the gift, so far as he could, and had vested it in the donees, possession under the gift had passed to M. Held also, on the construction of such instrument, that it did not give M a share in her father's partnership business.

13. Delivery of deed of gift of immovable property sufficient to pass title.—The delivery to the donee of immovable property of the deed of gift is sufficient to pass the title to such property to the donee without actual physical possession of such property being taken by the donee.

BALMAKUND v. BHAGWAN DAS

[I. L. R., 16 All., 185]

14. Attestation of deed, Effect of.—In 1873, R, a Hindu, executed a deed of gift of his immovable property to his daughter M (defendant No. 1). The deed was attested by the plaintiff. In 1878 R mortgaged to the plaintiff some of the land comprised in the deed of gift. R died in that year, and in 1882 his grandson conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who was already in possession of the mortgaged land as mortgagee. In the year 1888, the plaintiff being dispossessed by M and the second defendant, to whom she had sold the land, he brought the present suit to recover possession. The defendants relied upon the gift. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. At the time of the mortgage to him in 1878 R had not completed his gift to M by giving possession. He was therefore in a position to give the plaintiff a good title. It had not been shown that M had ever been treated as the owner of the equity of redemption. Held also that the circumstance that the plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1873 could not affect his title, as the gift had not been completed by delivery of possession.

BAI KUSHAL v. LAKHMA MANA

16. Delivery of possession—Transfer of Property Act, s. 123—Immovable and moveable property.—Assuming that delivery of possession was essential under the Hindu law to complete a gift of immovable property, that law has been abrogated by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. The first paragraph of that section means that a gift of immovable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument only, nothing more being necessary. Semble—The same is the case under that section with regard to moveable property, provided that a registered deed (and not the alternative mode of delivery) be adopted as the mode of transfer.

17. Gift of moveable property—Delivery of possession—Registration of deed of gift—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 123, 129—Registration.—The rule of Hindu law, that delivery of possession is essential to complete a gift, is abrogated by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). BAI RAMBAI v. BAI MANI

18. Verbal gift of immovable property—Death of the donor—Possession given to the donee by the son of the donor.—One G, being possessed of certain lands which were his self-acquired property, died in 1878. On his death-bed he told his son, P (the plaintiff's father), to give these lands to his (G's) daughter, the defendant. In the following year (1879) P by a registered deed of gift gave the lands to the defendant. The deed contained the following recital:—"Our vadir (father) G has made a gift to you of his self-acquired lands, Nos. 101 and 102, of mouzah Vadgaon for your own and your children's maintenance, and has directed me (P) to execute an instrument, according to law. I (P) hereby execute a deed of gift to you." Shortly after the execution of this document, the defendant was put into possession of the lands, and she admittedly continued in possession down to the commencement of this suit in 1888. The plaintiffs, who were the minor children of P, now sought to recover these lands from the defendant, alleging that on the death of their grandfather G the lands had devolved by inheritance upon his son P (their father), and contending that the latter had no power to make a gift of these to the defendant. The lower Court found that the question of P's competency to give the lands did not arise, as they had already been given to the defendant by his father G, and that P was simply an instrument in carrying out the wishes of his father

Their suit was dismissed, the Sudder Court finding it to be separate property. That Court found that R had acquired mouzah R from C by gift, and that R only took under this gift a life-interest in it. J and P having died, R made a gift of mouzah R to her agent, a reward for his faithful services. In a suit by N, son of J, as the heir of his uncle C, to set aside this gift to the agent as illegal,—Held on the finding that R had acquired the property from her husband by gift, that she did not take an absolute interest in the property under the gift, and her husband's heirs could question the validity of the gift to the agent. Held also that the gift to the agents, being made only out of motives of generosity, was invalid. *RUDR NARAIN SINGH v. brother, being the self-acquired immoveable property of his father, on the ground that under the Hindu law a father is not permitted to make a gift of immoveable property to one son to the injury of the other. Held (reviewing all the authorities and precedents on the subject) that, although prohibition of such a gift, on moral or spiritual grounds, may be implied by the texts of Hindu law, yet, where it is not declared that there is absolutely no power to do such acts, those acts, if done, are not necessarily void, and that therefore an exclusive gift to one son by the father of self-acquired immoveable property is not illegal. *SITAL v. V A, before his death, made a gift of the said property to Y in consideration of her having been G's concubine for many years. In a suit brought by V R to recover the whole property from Y, she claimed it by virtue of the gift to her by V A. Held that the gift was invalid as against V R, who was entitled to the whole property, subject to the maintenance of Y as a concubine of G for many years; the High Court also directed the said maintenance to be secured for her (Y) by investment of a sufficient part of the property in trust for that purpose. *VRANDAVANDAS RAMDAS v. The proportionate rent on 2,320 fanams is 365 paras. This quantity of paddy . . . shall be enjoyed by you and your sons and grandsons hereditarily by receiving the same from my sons. After certain clauses restricting the mode of enjoyment and the power of alienation, the instrument proceeded, "In the event of the said kanom being paid, that money shall be received by my sons, and shall be invested on some other property which may be approved of by you and your sons and by my sons, and from that property you may receive income yearly and enjoy the same." You, from this day becoming possessor thereof, after deduction of the Government revenue, with the balance of the profits, will perform acts of charity (dan o khairath) and maintain the sons. For this purpose I execute this dan-patro." A died leaving C, a son by his first wife, two minor sons by B, and B, his widow. The minor sons of B died unmarried and without issue. But as long as I live, I shall keep the management of my own affairs in my own hands, and look after all the transactions of dihat, etc., myself, as heretofore." B sold and conveyed parcels of the property. In a suit by her daughter's son against the purchasers for a declaration of his reversionary right to the property sold,—Held that, under the terms of the petition, there was an absolute gift to B, and that, as the gift was not fettered by any restrictions, the alienation by B was good and valid. CHATTAR LAL SINGH v. independently of the “Transfer of Property Act,” Act IV of 1882 (which may, or may not, have been expressed so as to lay down, in favour of absolute gifts, a rule more positive), is that indefinite words of gift are calculated to convey all the interest of the grantor, it being also necessary to read the whole of an instrument in order to gather the intention. A gift being thus expressed,—“I put a stop to my interest in those talukhs, and withdraw my enjoyment thereof, and I make them over to you,”—Held that this must be read with what preceded it, viz., “in order that you may perform those religious ceremonies, celebrate the festivals satisfactorily, and may provide for your own support, by having the property under your authority and control;” and that the words of gift must be taken to be limited by the purpose of the gift; the whole taken together showing that the donor's intention was that the donee should take the property for life only. *KALIDAS MULLICK v. My wives shall perform the ceremonies according to the shastras, and bring him up, and until that adopted son comes of age, those executors shall look after and superintend all the property, moveable and immovable, in my own name or benami left by me, also that adopted son: when he comes to maturity, the executors shall make over everything to him to his satisfaction. . . . God forbid, but should this adopted son die, and my younger brother N have more than one son, then my wives shall adopt a son of his. If at that time N has not a son eligible for adoption, they shall adopt another son of S, and the wives and executors shall perform all the aforementioned acts.” In a suit by one of G's widows as heir of her husband to set aside his will and recover half his property, it appeared that the abovementioned ceremonies had been performed by one widow only. Held that according to the true construction of the will (which was established by the evidence) there was a gift of his property by the testator to a designated person independently of the performance of the ceremonies. *NIDHOOMONI DEBYA v. The distinction between what is description only, and what is the reason or motive for a gift or bequest, may often be fine; but it must be drawn from a consideration of the language and the surrounding circumstances. *Nidhoomoni Debya v. bakshishpatra and given possession of the property to M under it. He directed the property to be restored to the possession of M, to be held according to the terms of the bakshishpatra. C appealed, but subsequently withdrew his appeal, admitting the execution of the bakshishpatra and agreeing to give over the property to M according to the terms of the Munsif's decree. M accordingly obtained possession of the property. On the 16th March 1874, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the grandson of M (M then being dead) for a moiety of the property on the ground that C, his adoptive father, could not alienate more than one-half of the property. Both the lower Courts allowed the plaintiff's claim, the Court of first instance being of opinion that the document was a gift, and did not bind the plaintiff, and the Appellate Court holding that it was not a gift, but a will, and that it had been revoked by the testator before his death. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the document was a conveyance and not a will, and that it vested the property in M, the donee, subject to a trust regarding any surplus that remained of the income after payment of the Government assessment and village expenses in favour of C as long as he lived, and that the donor could not revoke it, inasmuch as the document contained no power of revocation. Held also that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had been adopted before the hearing and decree in suit No. 446 of 1859 and might have been made a party to it, but was not, he could not be bound by proceedings in that suit, and that he was therefore at liberty to re-open the question whether the bakshishpatra was intended by C, when executing it, to operate as a deed or as a will. An adoption pendente lite is not to be regarded in the same light as an alienation pendente lite. If a legitimate son has been born to C during the suit, such son, to be bound by a pending suit affecting his father's ancestral property, must have been made a party, and a son adopted during the suit is in the same position. The one at his birth and the other at his adoption would take a vested interest in his father's property according to the Hindu law in the Presidency of Bombay. The circumstances that C might have adopted the plaintiff for the purpose of endeavouring to defeat the bakshishpatra did not alter the case. As a sonless Hindu, he had a right to adopt a son, and he was not under any obligation to M not to adopt; and, even if he had so contracted, quære—whether such a contract would affect the validity of the adoption. RAMBHAT v. His elder brother sued for possession of the property under the above clause. Held that, since the plaintiff was a person capable of taking, subject to the life-interest, at the time when the gift was made, he was entitled to succeed. Semble—If the gift to the plaintiff had failed, the property would have reverted to the heirs of the settlor on S's death without issue. Ram Lall Sett v. The gift was to the daughter and to her husband jointly. Held that, the gift being invalid as to the husband, the daughter took the whole estate given on the general principle of gifts to two persons jointly, where they failed as to one of them, operating entirely for the benefit of the other who could take, declared in Humphrey v. Tayleur, (Ambler, 138), which, not depending on any peculiarity of English law, was applicable here. NANDI SINGH v. SITA RAM

In 1877 a daughter, S, had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter. R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters—demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter, and for an injunction against her marriage without his consent. On filing this suit he obtained a rule nisi for an injunction against the defendants. Held that, pending the hearing of this suit, he was entitled to the injunction asked for. NANABHAI GANPATRAY DHARMAYAN v. and duties which they create may be enforced by either party against the other, and not exclusively by the husband against the wife. The Civil Courts of British India, as occupying the position in respect of judicial functions formerly occupied in the system of Hindu law by the king, have undoubtedly jurisdiction in respect of the enforcement of such rights and duties. The Civil Courts of British India can therefore properly entertain a suit between Hindus for the restitution of conjugal rights, or for the recovery of a wife who has deserted her husband. It is not necessary, as a condition precedent to such suits, the parties being Hindus, that there should be any demand by the plaintiff and refusal by the defendant. The limitation applicable to suits of the present nature is that of art. 120 of the second schedule, read with s. 23 of the Limitation Act. Desertion by a wife of her husband is permitted by the Hindu law under certain circumstances, but the insanity of the husband will not justify his desertion by the wife. In any case, desertion does not terminate the relation of husband and wife. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights could in such case only be effectually met by establishing a plea of some matrimonial offence on the part of the complainant such as would entitle the defendant to a separation. Legal cruelty on the part of the complainant may be a ground for refusing restitution of conjugal rights or for imposing terms on the complainant. HINDA v. KACHSILLA [I. L. R., 11 All., 128]

11. ——— Usage of the country.—No statute law exists regulating the devolution of property amongst Hindus. The law, therefore, to be applied in cases of inheritance is the usage of the country in which the suit arises (see Bom. Reg. II of 1826, s. 26). The commentaries and text-books embody in many instances the rules formed and enforced by custom, but custom, even on Hindu principles, may and must have power without their aid. They do not govern the usage of the country, save by a reflex process; it is the usage which adopts them, and they are law only because of this adoption in the sense and within the limits according to which their rules are accepted. Not merely the reception, but the exact extent of the reception of any law book is governed by usage. BHAGIRTHIBAI v. KAHNUJIRAY . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 285

3. SPECIAL LAWS.

(a) COORG.

12. ——— Inheritance, Law of—Mitakshara law.—The ex-Rajah of Coorg died in England in 1859, leaving considerable moveable property which he had himself acquired and accumulated, chiefly by means of his pensions and some ancestral jewels and ornaments. By his last will and testament he left all his property to trustees in trust to pay thereout certain legacies, and to divide the residue in certain proportions among various members of his family. Some difficulty having arisen after his death regarding the distribution of his estate, the Court of Chancery stated a case and propounded certain questions under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 63, for the opinion of Her Majesty's late Supreme Court at Fort William in Bengal, with reference to the Hindu law as administered by that Court, and so far as the same was applicable to the facts set forth in the case stated. The first and chief question propounded was—"What school of Hindu law would govern the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, and the rights and interests of the members of his immediate family, with reference to the will and facts stated, and also supposing he had died without having made any testamentary disposition of his property?" In answer to this question, the Court held that the doctrines of the Benares school of Hindu law, as laid down in the Mitakshara, should govern the decision of the case regarding the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, on the ground that the Mitakshara is the leading authority of Hindu law throughout Southern India as well as Benares, and that the Court had no reason to suppose that the doctrines of the Mitakshara had been in any way varied or altered by any text book recognized as an authority in Coorg, although some variations prevail in various parts of Southern India. The Court were further of opinion that the doctrines of the same school of Hindu law would govern the case, supposing the Rajah died without having made any testamentary disposition of his property. The succession to the property of a Hindu is governed by the laws which regulate his religious rites and ceremonies, and not by the domicile of himself or his family. LOGIN v. TIMMAJU HENSU . . . 1 Mad., 380

(c) CUTCHI MEMONS.

14. ——— Absence of special custom.—In the absence of proof of any special custom of inheritance, the Hindu law of inheritance applies to Cutchi Memons. ASHABAI v. TYEB HAJI RAHIMTULLA . . . I. L. R., 9 Bom., 115

15. ——— Custom—Joint family—Joint and ancestral property.—Cutchi Memons are governed by the Hindu law of inheritance in the absence of proof of special custom. A custom alleged to exist among Cutchi Memons of recognizing no difference between ancestral and self-acquired property held not proved. Four brothers of the Cutchi Memon community carried on trade with capital inherited from their father. Large profits were made in the course of business. It was alleged that some of the profits were made by means of borrowed capital, and some arose out of a commission business in which the capital of the firm was not used at all; and it was contended that such profits could not be considered as ancestral funds. It appeared, however, that the entire business was carried on by the same firm. There were common books, common expenses, and a common staff. The borrowed money was put into the general cash with the original capital. Held that the whole property was ancestral. Augmentations which blend, as they accrue, with the original estate partake of the character of that estate. Moreover, the loans in question and the extension of business to which they led might have produced heavy losses instead of great profits, and the family property would have been liable to debts so incurred. The family property, being thus subject to liabilities arising from the loans, was entitled to participate in any benefits resulting from them. MAHOMED SIDICK v. AHMED. ABDULA HAJI ABDSATAR v. 27. ——— Hindu family migrating—Presumption as to law applicable.—In a case where a Hindu family migrates from one territory to another, if they preserved their ancient religious ceremonies they also preserve the law of succession. 46. ————— Succession of bandhu—Priority of mother's half-brother over sons of father's paternal aunt—Mitakshara law.—The statement of bandhus entitled to inherit given in the Mitakshara, Ch. 11, s. 6, is not an exhaustive one. The maternal uncle of the deceased is omitted, but the sons of that uncle are specified. The omission to mention a maternal uncle does not signify that he is excluded from the first class of bandhus. The grounds of the judgment in Gridhari Lal Roy v. Government of Bengal, 1 B. L. R., P. C., 11 : 12 Moore's I. A., 448, apply not only to the heirship of a maternal uncle as against the claim in default of heirs, but also apply equally to questions between nearer and more remote bandhus. A maternal uncle is accordingly an heir, though not specified in the Mitakshara list, and he also has priority over the sons and grandsons of the paternal aunt of the father of the deceased, who are more remote than he is. A mother's brother by the half-blood stands on the same footing as her whole brother in regard to priority over more remote bandhus. A half-brother may be postponed to a whole-brother, but there is no ground for his postponement to more distant kinsmen. MUTHUSAMI MUDALIYAR v. SINAMBEDU MUTHUKUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR

49. ————— Preference of, to bandhus or bhinna gotra-sapindas—Vatan service, Alienability of, beyond lifetime by will—Effect of subsequent change in the tenure rendering it alienable.—The word "samanodakas," meaning literally those participating in the same oblation of water, includes descendants from a common ancestor more remotely related than the thirteenth degree from the propositus. One P died childless, devising his entire property, including his right to receive annually a certain desaigiri cash allowance, to the plaintiff's husband after the death of his (testator's) widow, B A. The testator and the plaintiff's husband were great-grandsons of one K by his son and daughter respectively. The plaintiff's husband having predeceased B A, she made another will in favour of the plaintiff. Subsequently B A died. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit against the defendants, claiming the aforesaid cash allowance and arrears under these wills and as heir of P. The defendants, who were distant cousins of P, being related to him beyond the thirteenth degree, inter alia contended that the wills were invalid, as P, when he made the will, had only a life-interest in the vatan, which was a service vatan, and that they were nearer heirs to P than the plaintiff, who was a bhinna gotra-sapinda or bandhu of P. Both the lower Courts rejected plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that plaintiff's claim should be disallowed. The alienation by will by P of what was then a vatan held for service, being in its inception invalid as against his heirs, did not become valid because of a change in the tenure of the estate after his life-interest had terminated. B A, the widow of P, had nothing more than a widow's estate incapable of alienation beyond her lifetime, and therefore the wills executed by her were invalid. The case was one to be determined by the Hindu law of inheritance. The defendants, though more than thirteen degrees removed from P, were included in the term "samanodakas," and as such had a claim to the estate of P superior to that of the plaintiff or her deceased husband as his bandhus. BAI DEVKORE v. AMRITRAM JAMIATRAM I. L. R., 10 Bom., 372

50. ————— Collateral distant relation—Right to share.—A descendant of a brother of the original acquirer, and a descendant not less than six generations, are not entitled under Hindu law to a share of the property. CHITUN MYTEE v. LUKHEE CHURN PATNAIK . . . . 8 W. R., 258

(d) SAPINDAS.

51. ————— Definition of sapindas.—The author of the Mitakshara in v. 3, s. 5, Ch. II, uses the word "sapinda" in the sense of "connection by particles of one body," and not in the sense of "connection by funeral oblations." In order to determine whether a person is a "sapinda" of the propositus within the meaning of the definition given by the author of the Mitakshara in Acharakanda

In a suit by an adopted son to recover his share in his adoptive father's estate, a son having been born to the adoptive father subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, the Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff a fourth share of the property in dispute. The defendant appealed to the District Court, but in appeal raised no question as to the extent of the share awarded to the plaintiff. On second appeal to the High Court it was contended that, in any event, the plaintiff was only entitled to a fifth share. Held that, under the circumstances and having regard to the nature of the question, the point might be taken in second appeal on behalf of the defendant, and the High Court varied the decree by awarding the plaintiff a fifth share instead of a fourth share, but ordered the appellant (defendant) to bear his own costs of the appeal. *GIRIAPA r. After K's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and upon these findings gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the plaintiff's rights as a daughter's son (which were not affected by his birth having taken place after his maternal grandfather's death) did not entitle him, under ordinary circumstances, to succeed to his maternal grandfather's estate in a divided Hindu family during the existence of a daughter, whether she were his own mother or his maternal aunt; and that the claim for possession was therefore rightly dismissed. *Amirtolal Bose v. 88. ————— Mitakshara law.

—According to Mitakshara law, a daughter's son takes his maternal grandfather's estate as full proprietor, and on his death such estate devolves on his heirs, and not on the heirs of his maternal grandfather. His g. traaja-sapindas, or the persons related to him through his father, have therefore preferential right to succeed him to the persons related to him through his mother. SIBTA v. BADRI PRASAD

89. ————— Adopted son of daughter—Brothers.—According to Hindu law, a person cannot succeed as the adopted son of a daughter who has brothers alive, and who cannot be an appointed daughter if she had brothers when she married. Nor can he succeed as claiming under a bought son. YACHEREDDY CHINNA BASSAVAPA v. YACHEREDDY GOWDAPA . 5 W. R., P. C., 114

—A daughter's son does not inherit where there is a great-grandson of the deceased alive. GOOROO-GOBINDO CHOWDERY v. HUREE MADHUB ROY

[Marsh., 338: 2 Hay, 401]

91. ————— Estate of maternal grandfather—Daughter.

—A suit brought against K, the widow of R, a Hindu, by the representatives of R's brothers, H and P, for possession of his estate, ended in a compromise by which the defendant recognized the plaintiffs' rights, and conceded that the family was joint. After K's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and upon these findings gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the plaintiff's rights as a daughter's son (which were not affected by his birth having taken place after his maternal grandfather's death) did not entitle him, under ordinary circumstances, to succeed to his maternal grandfather's estate in a divided Hindu family during the existence of a daughter, whether she were his own mother or his maternal aunt; and that the claim for possession was therefore rightly dismissed. *Amirtolal Bose v. Held that, there not being any special provision in the Mitakshara or the Mayukha in respect of persons of the half-blood other than brothers and their sons, the general rule applies, that the nearest sapinda succeeds in the absence of special local custom to the contrary, and therefore the plaintiffs were the heirs of the propositus to the exclusion of the defendants or any of them. *SAMAT v. The brother was the defendant's father; he and the widow were since dead, the widow having died in the brother's lifetime. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to a moiety of the estate of the deceased by inheritance. The defendant claimed the whole on the ground that the deceased lived as a reunited or associated brother with his (the defendant's) father, whereas the plaintiff was the son of a separated brother of the deceased. Held that the material issue to be tried in the case was whether the widow lived in a state of reunion with the defendant, as her husband had done with the defendant's father, or whether she at the time of her death lived separate from him, though in the same family house. *RAMHARI SARMA v. On the death of B leaving a daughter, who married but subsequently died without male issue, the grandsons and the sole representative of C, who also had died, claimed to be entitled as one of the reversionary heirs of B to one-third of his property. ### (b) FEMALES.

166. ——— General rules—Succession of female heirs—Nature of property.—It is not the universal rule that a Hindu woman cannot inherit so long as there is a male representative of the family. Her right to inherit depends on the nature of the property. If the property be the joint property of an undivided Hindu family, females are only entitled to maintenance; but if the property be held as a separate or divided property, it devolves upon the female heirs in their proper order of succession. SOORJOON v. ISHREE BRAHMAN . 3 N. W., 74

167. ——— Exclusion of female heirs—Mitakshara law—Joint property.—When it is sought to exclude female heirs from succession to a husband or father under the Mitakshara, on the ground that the estate is joint, it must be shown to have been so at the time of the husband's or father's death, and not merely at the death of a predeceasing brother, the father of the claimant. PITUM KOONWAR alias MUNAR BEBEE v. JOY KISHEN DOSS . 6 W. R., 101

168. ——— Limited estate in immoveable property inherited by females who have become members of family by marriage—Absolute estate in immoveable property taken by females who have not become members of family by marriage—Nature of estate taken by widow, mother, grandmother, daughter, sister, maternal great-niece.—A maternal great-niece inheriting property is in the same position, as regards the nature of the estate taken by her, as a daughter or a sister. The rule which, in the Presidency of Bombay, restricts the alienation of property by a widow succeeding to her husband or a mother succeeding to her son, does not apply to women who have not become members of the family by marriage, e.g., a daughter takes an absolute estate in the property which she inherits from her father, and a sister takes a like estate in property inherited from her brother. The above rule, which restricts the alienation of property by a widow inheriting from her husband or by a mother inheriting from her son, would seem to be applicable to a grandmother inheriting from her grandson, or to the widow of a sapinda, for they, like the widow and mother, enter by marriage into the family whence the property comes which they inherit. The plaintiff sued to recover the moveable and immoveable property left by his brother's widow, L, who died without issue. The property in question had been given to L and her grandmother, R, jointly by R's sister, M (L's maternal grandmother), who executed to them a deed of gift dated 17th

December 1843. On her death, R and L took possession, and remained in joint possession until the death of R, which occurred in 1867. L was thenceforward, until her death on April 19th. 1869, in sole possession. The plaintiff had obtained a certificate of heirship to L under Bombay Regulation VIII of 1827. The defendants were L's first cousins once removed. They claimed under a deed of gift executed to them dated 27th February 1869, and duly registered. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding the deed of gift to be ultra vires both as to the moveable and immoveable property. On appeal to the District Court, the Judge varied the decree of the lower Court, holding the deed of gift to be ultra vires only as to the immoveable property, and he varied the decree by awarding to the plaintiff as heir of L the immoveable property only. On appeal to the High Court, the only question argued was the nature of the estate taken by L in the immoveable property, her absolute right to the moveable property being admitted. Held that, whether L took by grant or by inheritance from M, she took an absolute estate, and, being as she was without issue, had complete power to execute the deed of gift in favour of the defendants. *TULJARAM MORARJI v. His other daughter, who was well off and possessed of property, claimed to share in such estate, contending, with reference to the law of the Mitakshara, that, as no provision had been made for her by her father, she was "unprovided" for within the meaning of that law, and therefore entitled to share in such estate. Held that such expression must be construed irrespective of the sources of provision or non-provision. DANNO v. have interests which pass inter se by right of survivorship, and a widow's right as heir is excluded by the test when any of such collateral kinsmen survive her husband. The governing principle of the rule is co-parcenary survivorship, which precludes alike the right of the widow and every other member of the family, who has no right to the enjoyment of the estate before the death of the possessor. YENUMULA GAYATHIDEVAMMA GARU v. YENUMULA RAMANDORA GARU . . . . . 8 Mad., 93

259. ————— Sapindas—Law in Bombay.—In the Presidency and Island of Bombay the wife is a sapinda as well as a gotraja of her husband, and, if he die (without leaving a son or grandson), she, on the subsequent death of his separated sapinda and in the absence of any specially designated heir entitled to preference, ranks in the same place in the order of succession to the property of such separated sapinda as her husband would have occupied if he were living. Thus the widow of first cousin ex-parte paterna of the deceased propertius was held prior in order of succession to a fifth male cousin ex-parte paterna of the same. Or, in other words, a wife becomes by her marriage a sapotrasapinda of her husband and his gotraja-sapindas, and in that capacity succeeds as a widow to property which he would have taken as a sapinda before the male representative of a remoter branch. The Institutes of Manu, the Mitakshara, and the Mayukha, although of great authority in the Presidency of Bombay, are all subject to the control of law and usage. No one of them is, as a whole, in full force in any part of the Presidency. In all of them there are precepts which, if they ever were practical law, have, for a time beyond the memory of living men, been obsolete. LALLUBHAI BAPUBHAI v. MANDEVADIBHAI

[I. L. R., 2 Bom., 388

In the same case on appeal it was held by the Privy Council.—By the Hindu law in force in Western India the widow of a collateral relation, although she is not specified in the texts amongst the heirs to members of her husband's family, may come into the succession as one of the classes of gotraja-sapindas of that family. According to the law of the Mitakshara as accepted in Western India, the right to inherit in the classes of gotraja-sapindas is to be determined by family relationship, or the community of corporal particles, and not only by the capacity of performing funeral rites. The High Court having affirmed as a right, according to the law actually prevalent in Western India, the claim of a widow of a first cousin, on the father's side, of the deceased to inherit his estate as a gotraja-sapinda, it was held that there was no reason for withholding from that doctrine the force of law; the right of the widow being mainly rested on the ground of positive acceptance and usage. In this case the widow of a first cousin of the deceased, on the father's side, was held to have become by her marriage gotraja-sapinda of her husband's cousin's family, and to have a title to succeed to the estate of

After the death of B M, the plaintiff, who was the son of T's sister, sued to recover the property from the defendants, who were distant samuodaka relations of N. It was contended on the plaintiff's behalf that on J's death B M took the property as her stridhan acquired by inheritance, and that the plaintiff, as bandhu of her husband T, was heir to B M, who died without issue. Held (confirming the decree dismissing the suit) that on J's death (N and H being divided) B M succeeded to the property as a gotraja sapinda, being the widow of T, the nephew of N. As such, she took only a life-interest in the property, and had no absolute interest in it as in her stridhan proper. In the Presidency of Bombay female heirs who by marriage enter into the gotra of the male whom they succeed (including widow, mother, grandmother, the widow of a gotraja-sapinda, etc.) take only a widow's estate in property which they inherit from the last male owner. Whether the estate inherited by these female heirs is called their stridhan or not, their restricted rights over it are admitted by all schools. *MADHAVRAM MUGATRAM v. 282. ————— Maintenance, Right to—Sudras—Issue of Pat marriage.—The general result of the authorities, both juridical and forensic, is that among the three regenerate classes of Hindus (Brahmans, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas) illegitimate children are entitled to maintenance, but cannot inherit, unless there be local usage to the contrary; and that, among the Sudra class, illegitimate children, in certain cases at least, do inherit. The extent to which this right exists considered, and the texts of Hindu law books bearing on the point referred to. According to Vijnyaneshvara, the author of the Mitakshara (Ch. I, s. 12), the father of an illegitimate son by a Dasi among Sudras may, in his (the father's) lifetime, allot to such son a share equal to that of a legitimate son, and, if the father die without making such allotment, the illegitimate son by the Dasi is entitled to half the share of a legitimate son, and, if there be no legitimate son and no legitimate daughter or son of such a daughter, the illegitimate son by the Dasi takes the whole estate. If, however, there be a legitimate daughter or legitimate son of such a daughter, the illegitimate son would take only half of the share of a legitimate son, and such daughter or daughter's son would take the residue of the property, subject to the charge of maintaining the widow of the deceased proprietor. The defendants were his illegitimate sons. After his death, his widow, one of his daughters, and the defendants continued to live together in union, and managed the property jointly. The widow died in 1880, and the defendants took possession of all the property. In 1885 the plaintiff brought this suit claiming to recover it, alleging that one of her sisters was disentitled from inheriting by disease; that the other was rich, and that the defendant's illegitimacy excluded them. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim. The District Judge in appeal held that she was entitled to one-sixth of the property only, and the defendants to one-half. The defendants appealed to the High Court, contending that, on the death of the widow, the entire property survived to them. Held that the defendants were not entitled to more than the half to which they succeeded immediately on the death of their father, S. Had both the sons been illegitimate, their claims, unless some special custom governed the case, which is not in proof, would have been to maintenance only. In this last-named case the widow would have had the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow,"—commented upon and explained. The terms Dasi and Dasputra as defined by various writers on Hindu law, discussed and the rights by inheritance of a Dasputra considered. The condition that, in order to entitle the illegitimate offspring of a Sudra woman by a Sudra to inherit the property of the latter or share in it, she should, according to Jimuta Vahana and Nilkantha be an unmarried woman, has in practice been discarded in the Presidency of Bombay. In this Presidency the illegitimate offspring of a kept woman, or continuous concubine amongst Sudras are on the same level as to inheritance as the issue of a female slave by a Sudra. G, a Sudra woman, was married to T, also a Sudra, by Pat marriage, without having received a chhor chiti (release) from her first husband, who was then living, or obtained any other sanction of her Pat with T. Held that the intercourse between G and T was adulterous and that therefore the plaintiff, their son, being the result of such intercourse, was not entitled to take as heir even to the extent of half a share, and was not a Dasputra within the scope of Lajjavaralkya's text or recognized as such by other commentators. He was however held entitled to maintenance as he had been recognized by T as his son. RAHJ v. GOVINDA WALAD TEJA. I. L R., 1 Bom., 97.

283 ——— Sudras—In the case of Sudras the law has been and still is that illegitimate sons succeed their fathers by right of inheritance. PANDAIYA TELAYAR v. PULI TELAYAR. 11 Mad., 478.

284 ——— Illegitimate sons of Jains of Dassa Porwad class—Right to maintenance.—Under the ordinary Hindu law, illegitimate sons do not inherit, but are only entitled to maintenance. Held that a Jain of the Dassa Porwad caste was governed by the general Hindu law applicable to the three regenerate castes, being though not a Brahmin, certainly not a Sudra but a Vaishya by origin, and having as such carried this law with him from Gujarat to the Belgaum District. Held, therefore, that his widow was his sole heir, and that his illegitimate sons were only entitled to maintenance. Quere—Whether even among Sudras the vidua is also, either excluded from inheritance by illegitimate sons. *Rahj v. 309. ————— Mitakshara law—Rules governing succession.—For determining who is to be heir to an impartible estate, the same rules apply which also govern the succession to partible estates, though the estates can be held by only one member of the family at a time. 310. ————— Rules for succession to impartible estate—Custom—Seniority—Mitakshara law—Nearness of kin—Brothers of whole and half-blood.—In determining the right of succession to an impartible estate, the class of kindred from whom a single heir is to be selected should be first ascertained. Next, it should be seen whether family custom or kulachar discloses a special rule of selection, and, in default of such custom, seniority of age constitutes a title by descent to the impartible estate, by analogy to general Hindu law. Nearness of blood is no ground of preference under the Mitakshara law in case of disputed succession to co-parcenary property which is partible, and it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. Where therefore the family property is impartible and belongs to a co-parcenary family consisting of all the brothers of the deceased propositus, whether of the whole or half-blood, in the absence of a specification to the contrary, the brother that is entitled to succeed to the property is the eldest in years. Thus, when a Sudra marries a woman of his caste, but of an inferior class, as a dagger wife, in addition to his wife equal in caste to him, the rule of selection is in favour of his son by the latter by reason of the mother being of a higher class. A valid custom prevails among the Kumbha zamindars, whereby the son by a senior wife has a prior right of succession to a son by a junior wife, although the latter may be the elder son, seniority referring to the date of the marriage and not the age of the wife. 314. ————— Succession to raj, Nature of.—On the question of the extent to which property of the nature of an impartible raj is excepted from the general law by a special rule of succession entitling the eldest of the next of kin to take solely,—Held that such a usage does not interfere with the general rules of succession further than to vest the possession and enjoyment of the corpus of the whole estate in a single member of the family, subject to the legal incidents attached to it as the heritage of an undivided family. The unity of the family right to the heritage is not severed any more than by the succession of co-parceners to partible property; but the mode of its beneficial enjoyment is different. Instead of several members of the family holding the property in common, one takes it in its entirety, and the common law rights of the others, who would be co-parceners of partible property, are reduced to rights of survivorship to the whole, dependent upon the same contingency as the rights of survivorship of co-parceners inter se to the undivided share of each, and to a provision for maintenance in lieu of co-parcenary shares. to a zamindari which is admitted to be in the nature of a principality, impartible and capable of enjoyment by only one member of the family at a time, is governed (in the absence of a special custom of descent) by the general Hindu law prevalent in the part of India in which the zamindari is situated, with such qualifications only as flow from the impartible character of the subject. The succession to such a zamindari may be governed by a particular or customary canon of descent. The course of succession, according to the Hindu law of the south of India of such a zamindari, where the family was in other respects an undivided family, was held to be that the husband dying without male issue, his widow inherited it. In the case of property of which part is the common property of a joint Hindu family and part the separate acquisition of a deceased brother, his widow (in default of male issue) succeeds to his separate estate. KATTAMA NAICHEER v. XXV of 1802.—The question whether an estate is impartible and descends by the law of primogeniture, or is subject to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, must be decided in each case according to the evidence given in it. The result of the evidence in this suit was to show that before and in the year 1802, the zamindar was in possession of the Devarakota zamindari, by right of primogeniture, as an impartible estate; and that he was so regarded by the Government. On the passing of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802, and the issue to him of a sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrari in accordance with it, he acquired a permanent property in the zamindari lands at a fixed assessment, but they remained heritable as before; the estate remained entire; and there was no evidence of any intention on the part of the Government to alter the nature of the tenure. What was said in the judgment in the Hansapur case, 12 Moore's I. A., 1, was applicable here. The estate continued to be impartible, and the rule of succession to it was not altered. It descended by the rule of primogeniture. SRIMANTU RAJA YARLAGADDU MALLIKARJUNA v. SRIMANTU RAJA YARLAGADDU DURGA

even if impartibility was the rule then applicable to the estate, yet the subsequent dealings with the zamindari, the nature and terms of the grants under which it was held after 1802, and the absence of proof of its having been impartible during the present century, also the character of the estate, which was in no way distinguishable from that of an ordinary zamindari assessed to the revenue, all led to the conclusion that the zamindari was now partible. It was clear from the kabuliat, or instrument of assent to the sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrari of 25th April 1804, that the latter was in the ordinary form of such grants, and there was no ground for inferring that the Government intended to create an impartible zamindari, or to restore an old one with impartibility attached. In 1835 there was, for a second time, such a dealing with the estate by the Government, in granting it again by sanad, as showed that there was no intention to the effect above mentioned. The case of the Hansapur Zamindari, 12 Moore's I. A., 1, situate in Behar, as to which their Lordships in 1867 held that it must be taken to retain its previous old quality of impartibility after having been granted in 1790, was distinguished. *SATRUCHARLA JAGANADHA RAZU v. She died in 1877, leaving the present plaintiff, her son and three daughters her surviving. A suit was then brought by the father of the present defendant, who was the son of her elder sister (deceased), against the present plaintiff and the daughter of the late Rani for possession of the zamindari to which he claimed to be entitled by right of inheritance. A decree was passed for the plaintiff in that suit, under which he obtained possession of the zamindari and retained it until his death in 1883, when he was succeeded by the present defendant. The plaintiff now sued as above, claiming that the right to the zamindari had devolved on him, and not on the defendant, on the death of the plaintiff in the former suit. Held (1) that the defendant's father had not succeeded to a qualified heritage, nor to a mere right of management of joint family property in which the plaintiff had a right of survivorship, but that he had succeeded to the estate as full owner, and had therefore become a fresh stock of descent; (2) that accordingly nearness or remoteness of relationship to the istimrar true successor was the heir of the last owner of the originally unobstructed estate, though this did not apply to a partible estate. But for such a distinction no authority was cited, nor any principle suggested; and it was not upheld. The parties to this suit, first cousins once removed, contested the right to inherit an impartible zamindari, which had been acquired by their common ancestor, who had left two daughters by two different wives. The plaintiff was the son of the younger daughter; the defendant's father was the son of the elder. The younger half-sister survived the elder, and in 1863 was judicially declared to have inherited alone the impartible zamindari. On her death, the elder daughter's son, in litigation ending in 1881, made good his title to the impartible zamindari, being the descendant in the elder line. Held that this son of the elder daughter became, as the last male owner, the stock from which descent had now to be traced, and that the ancestor was no longer that stock. And held that the son of this last male owner had a title to the zamindari on his father's death in consequence of the full and complete ownership of the latter, who had himself become a fresh root of title. This decision disposed of the only question that was argued on this appeal. But the decision of the Courts below that the plaintiff could not claim the inheritance in virtue of survivorship was also affirmed. The judgment below, on this part of the case, was based on this, that no family coparcenary had existed to give rise to survivorship, as the sons of daughters could not form a family coparcenary, which could only consist of the descendants of a paternal ancestor. *MUTTVADUGANADHA TEVAR v. 329. ———— Succession to raj—Grant by Government—Beng. Reg. XI of 1793—Rights of junior members of family.—The land sued for was originally an impartible raj, and by family custom descended on the death of each successive Rajah to his eldest male heir. It was confiscated by Government, and in 1790, when the decennial settlement was made, was permanently conferred on A, a Hindu. A in his lifetime, by his acts and otherwise, showed that he wanted the estate to descend to a single heir, and shortly before his death he made B, the son of his eldest grandson, such heir, and left a testamentary paper in furtherance of that object. The present suit was brought by some of the grandsons of A, who claimed to be co-heirs with B under the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, and contended that the will was a forgery; that A had no power to make it; and that the special law of inheritance ceased when the first proprietor was expelled. It was found from the acts of the Government, and its dealings with the property, that A derived his title by grant from the Government, who had full dominion over the estate. The estate consequently must be taken to have been the separate and self-acquired property of A, and the nature of the estate granted was held to be a fresh grant of the family raj, as it had existed before the confiscation, with its customary rule of descent, the omission of the title of raj in the grant (there being no sanad in this case) not affecting the case, the title of Rajah not being absolutely essential to the tenure of the estate as a raj. Regulation XI of 1793 did not apply to this case, in which the grant was made before the passing of that Regulation, which, moreover, does not affect the descent of large zamindaris held as raj, or subject to family custom. The grant being of the nature found, it was further held that the question as to whether A had by law power to make a will did not really arise in this case, the only person who could impeach the will being the eldest grandson of A, who had waived his right in favour of his son B, there being no inchoate rights of inheritance in the junior members of the family. *BEEPERTA SAHEE v. It appeared that the poitem had been held on military tenure from the sixteenth century, that it had never been partitioned, and that the custom of impartibility obtained in a large number of similar poitem in the same district. In 1831 and in 1842 enquires were made of members of the zamindar's family and other persons connected with the zamindari as to the nature of the estate, and their recorded answers showed that they understood the estate to be impartible, and that it descended to a single heir. Held (1) that the poitem was impartible, (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to decree for a monthly payment to him of Rs 60 for his maintenance. The plaintiff's claim extended to certain pannai lands within the limits of the zamindari some of which had been handed down from zamindar to zamindar since 1831, others having been purchased by the plaintiff's father. The High Court found that they had been recognized and dealt with as part and parcel of the zamindari. Held that the pannai lands were impartible, and the plaintiff was not entitled to a share in them or in the cattle, etc., used for cultivating them. The plaintiff further claimed a sum of Rs 1 000, the amount of a loan alleged to have been contracted by him for the purposes of his marriage. It appeared that the cost of the marriage had been defrayed by the bride's brother. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree on this account, although if he had incurred debts for the purposes of his marriage, the defendant would have been liable. LAKSHMIPATHI v KANDASAMI

But the law of partition shows that, as to the separately acquired property of one member of a united family, the other members of that family have neither community of interest nor unity of possession. Sadu and Mahadu continued to live together for some time after their father's death; but subsequently, owing to domestic quarrels they lived separately, and Sadu was allowed by Mahadu a portion of the family property under an agreement in writing. They were, however, joint and undivided in estate, and continued to be so until the death of Mahadu in 1865. In a suit by Sadu as heir of his father and brother for the whole of the ancestral property,—Held by a Full Bench (WESTROP, C.J., KEMBALL and PINHEY, J.J.) that after the death of their father, Mahadu and Sadu succeeded as co-parceners to the whole property, subject to the maintenance of B, S, and Darya, if she were then unmarried, and in that event also to her reasonable marriage expenses,—Sadu, however, as an illegitimate son, taking only half a share. Held also that inequality of shares did not prevent co-parcenary and succession by survivorship, and that, as Mahadu and Sadu were co-parceners from the death of their father until the death of Mahadu, the usual result of co-parcenary followed on the occurrence of the latter event, viz., the surviving co-parcener (i.e., the plaintiff Sadu) took the whole property. *Rahi v. 11. ————— Presumption as to property being joint.—As a result of litigation, a decree was passed establishing the title of R as a brother by adoption to L and a co-sharer of his family property; but no possession was actually directed to be given to R except of the zamindari which was the principal family estate. Subsequently an execution-creditor of R took possession of two lots, which were no part of the zamindari proper, the one having been acquired as a separate inheritance by an ancestor and the other having been purchased by L in the name of the priest of the family. Held that R's title to the two lots was the same as his title to the zamindari, and that the burden of proof lay upon those who insisted that the two lots did not form part of the joint family estate. *CHAND HURREE MAITEE v. [I. L. R., 9 Mad., 477]

13. ————— Presumption—Raj—Separate estate.—In the case of an ordinary joint undivided family the presumption would be that the property is joint, but where a plaintiff, though admitting the family is undivided, contends that the family estate is a raj and has always been held by one member separate and distinct from the others, who are only entitled to maintenance, the undivided nature of the family alone on this contention can raise no presumption as to the joint nature of the estate so as to shift the burden of proof from the plaintiff to the defendant,—a presumption inconsistent with the contention itself. But if under such circumstances the head of the family alleges that he has made purchases in the name of a single member, and that allegation is traversed, the onus will be on the party making the allegation to prove his case. *RAJENDER PERTAB SAHA v. 16. ————— Presumption as to house built by member of joint family—Claim to exclusive possession.—Where a member of a family claims an exclusive right to a house which he has built, the presumption of Hindu law against his claim arises only if the family is joint, having possession of joint property. *GUNGADHUR CHATTERJEE v. 7. ——— Evidence of partition of joint family—Presumption—Concurrent decision on fact—Practice of Privy Council—Ground of appeal —In a suit to enforce an alleged right of one brother against another to separate proprietary possession of a share in joint family estate, the concurrent findings of the Court below were definitely to the effect that a partition had taken place, after which the brothers had been no longer joint as to their interests. The Courts had fully gone into the case on either side, receiving the evidence offered by either party, and they had considered the whole of it. Therefore, it could not be effectively urged, as a ground of appeal, that the Courts below, in coming to the above conclusion, had erred in putting the burden of proof unduly upon the plaintiff, or disregarded the presumption arising from the original state of the family. RAM CHARAN v. DEVI DIN

8. ——— Suit for share of joint property—Allegation of separation and exclusion —In a suit for partition of joint family property, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiff's branch of the family had been separated more than thirty years ago. The plaintiff proved that the family property was joint and that he had a share in it. Held that under the circumstances it lay on the defendants to prove plaintiff's exclusion from the joint estate for more than twelve years and an exclusion known to the plaintiff. *JIVANATH v. 9. ——— Presumption—Evidence of separation —The father and the son under the Mitakshara law are in the position of a joint Hindu family, and where ancestral estates are admitted to exist, the presumption of law is that all the property they are in possession of is joint property. *See SORJONOVZ DAYEE v. said with joint funds and for the joint family, which consisted of I and his two brothers, fathers of the plaintiffs. The defence was that the lease was granted to I after the dissolution of commensality. The existence of any nucleus of joint property was not proved. Held that, where one member of a joint family is found to be in possession of any property, the family being presumed to be joint in estate, the presumption is, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of a joint family. Therefore, the burden of proof was on the defendant to show that I had acquired the property separately, and that it was property which could by law be treated as a separate acquisition. TARUK CHUNDER PODDAR v. 30. ———— Purchase with joint funds—Execution of decree.—A purchase by a member of a Hindu joint family with the joint funds is a purchase on account of the joint family, and property so bought may be taken in execution for a joint family debt. BISSESSUR LALL SAHOO v. LUCHMESSUR SINGH . L. R., 6 I. A., 233

31. ———— Joint property—Presumption that family is joint.—The presumption of Hindu law is that every family is joint, and that all property possessed by the family is joint. A member of an undivided family may, however, acquire separate property, but the burden of proof lies upon him to prove the independent character of the acquisition. The essence of his exclusive title is that the separate property was acquired by his sole agency without employing what is common to the family. MOOLJI LILLA v. GOKULDAS VULLA

32. ———— Presumption as to family being joint—Joint enjoyment of property.—The normal condition of a Hindu family being joint, it must be presumed to remain joint, unless some proof of a subsequent separation is given; and where property is shown to have been once joint family property, it is presumed to remain joint until the contrary is shown; but the mere fact of a family being joint is not enough to raise a presumption in law that property acquired by one member of that family is joint property. Where A, as purchaser, claimed a share in property as being joint family property,—Held that A was not only bound to show that the family was joint, but that the property in question became joint property when acquired, or that at some period since its acquisition it had been enjoyed jointly by the family. SHIU GOLAM SINGH v. HURRYNARAIN SHAW . 12 B. L. R., 349

35. ———— Acquiescence in property being considered joint.—Certain Hindus descended from a common ancestor, after having lived in commensality and joint estate, separated, no deed of separation being executed or reservation expressed of any kind. About eleven years after, one of the parties to the separation sued the others, alleging that certain immoveable property, which stood in the name of the defendants or their ancestor, had remained in the possession of the defendants on the allegation of exclusive purchase; but that it could be proved to have been acquired by joint ancestral income during the time the family was joint. Held that the common presumption of Hindu law in favour of members of a joint family did not apply to such a case, and it lay on the plaintiffs to show why they were silent so long. Where other property was proved to have been separately acquired by the members of the family, it was held that there was no more presumption of joint than of separate acquisition. BADUL SINGH v. So, too, when it is admitted or proved that partition has already taken place, the presumption is that it has been a complete partition, and it lies upon a person alleging that family property, in the exclusive possession of one of the members of the family after such partition, is liable to be partitioned, to make good his allegation by proof. As to the house in Bombay, the first defendant alleged that it was his self-acquired property, that he had purchased it in his own name in 1803 out of his private funds, that there were no family funds, and that neither his father nor his brothers (the latter of whom were then very young) were in a position to contribute anything towards the purchase, that by his invitation his father and brother had lived with him in the house by the first defendant's permission up to the date of suit. ### 1. PRESUMPTION AND ONUS OF PROOF AS TO JOINT FAMILY—continued.

Caste-men to documents by which a Hindu affects to deal with his property as though he were separate in estate is a circumstance which throws suspicion on the truth of an alleged separation, as the presence of such would be satisfactory evidence of a state of things generally believed to be true at the time.
CHHABILA MANOHAR v. JADAYBHAI

[3 Bom., O. C., 87

88. ——— Separation in food and habitation—Separation of joint family, Evidence of.—Although a family may be separate in food and habitation, it may still be joint under Hindu law, if the family property be joint. In this case there was held to be not sufficient evidence of separation.
PARBUTTY COOMAR v. SUDABUT PERSAD

89. ——— Separation in residence and transaction of affairs—Evidence of partition.—Evidence of some separation in residence, separate transaction of affairs in certain instances, and acquisition of the property in dispute by plaintiff, all occurring in recent years, are not sufficient to prove division.
KRISTNAPPA CHETTY v. RAMASWAMY IYER

90. ——— Separate appropriation of profits—Evidence of partition.—Separate appropriation of profits would in some cases be very good evidence of a tacit agreement amongst the members of a joint Hindu family, to hold their property according to their separate shares. CHYET NARAIN SINGH v. BUNWAREE SINGH . 23 W. R., 395

91. ——— Alienation of share of one member—Proof of separation in estate.—The mere fact of one of several co-sharers alienating his share of the property is no proof of separation in estate.
TREELOCHUN ROY v. RAJKISHEN ROY

[5 W. R., 214

92. ——— Portion of estate separately held—Long separate possession.—The acts of different members of a family in allowing separate portions of the banks of a tank to be held severally for so long a time that no one can tell when such possession began, constitute a separation of the land which cannot be disturbed at the instance of one member without proof that he has jointly or otherwise held possession of the lands in question within twelve years. SUBBESSUR METHOOR v. GOSSAIN DOSS METHOOR . 17 W. R., 210

93. ——— Incomplete separation—Absence of separate enjoyment through opposition of co-sharer.—Where the surviving sharer in an estate sought to be put in possession of his co-sharer's portion, as manager on behalf of the latter's widow, on the ground that, though the deceased co-sharer had made efforts to reduce his share to distinct possession, those efforts had not been completely successful when he died, and he could not therefore be said to have had a separate enjoyment of the said share.—Held that, as the deceased co-sharer had done all that was possible to obtain separate possession, and it was only the opposition of the plaintiff that had obstructed him, it would be allowing plaintiff to benefit by the wrong he had done to give him possession; that the co-sharers must be held to have separated, and that the share of the deceased co-sharer must be held to have passed to those to whom, though not his immediate heirs, he had been taking steps, when he died, to devise the possession of it. JOY NARAIN GIRI v. GOLUCK CHUNDER MYTEE 25 W. R., 355

94. ——— Management by one brother—Presumption of property being joint.—Where property is not expressly shown to be separate, the presumption of Hindu law is that it is joint, and when one brother has managed the property and made collections and acquired property out of such collection, he is accountable to his other brothers who are entitled to share in the property so acquired.

95. ——— Record of proprietorship in one name—Purchase from one member of family.—The mere fact of the name of the managing member of a joint Hindu family standing as the recorded proprietor of an estate is not per se sufficient to give title to a purchaser for valuable consideration from him, unless at the time of the purchase the purchaser was ignorant of the real state of the family, and was really led by that circumstance to believe that the recorded proprietor was the sole owner. GOUR CHUNDER BISWAS v. GREESH CHUNDER BISWAS . 7 W. R., 120

96. ——— Property standing in name of one member—Separate possession and acquisition.—The mere fact of certain property standing in the name of one member of a joint family is no index to the real owner, nor is the existence of a separate possession any evidence as to separate acquisitions, unless such separate possessor can prove consent of the other sharers to his keeping a separate account. ### 76. — Onus probandi.

Division of property—In the case of an ordinary Hindu family who are living together, or who have their entire property in common, the presumption is, that everything in the possession of any one member of the family belongs to the common stock. The onus of establishing the contrary rests on him who alleges separate property. But this presumption does not arise where it appears that there has been a division of the family property and a separation in the family, all the members of which are living separately BANWOO v KASHEE RAM

83. — Separation in food and residence—Presumption of separation in estate—Separation in dwelling and food would give rise in Hindu law to a presumption of separation in estate. the presumption of joint acquisition arising in such cases cannot be rebutted by the mere fact that her name was used in making the purchase or entered in the Collector's books as the purchaser. CHUNDER NATH MOITRO v. KRISTO KOMUL SINGH

Property purchased in names of wife and daughter-in-law.—In a suit for partition of joint family property, it was found that certain property stood partly in the name of the wife of the original proprietor and partly in that of a daughter-in-law. Held that a wife, a member of a joint family, is, as regards property held in her name, in the same position as her husband with respect to property acquired in his name, and subject to the same presumption in favour of the joint family. Chunder Nath Moitro v. Kristo Komul Singh, 15 W. R., 357, followed. Chowdhraim v. Tarini Kant Lahiri Chowdhry, 15 C. L. R., 41, distinguished. NOBIN CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. DOKHOBALA DAS . I. L. R., 10 Cal., 686

[I. L. R., 8 Mad., 214]

107. ———— *Purchase and possession of portion of property by one member—Source of purchase-money.—Where a Hindu family lives joint in food and estate, the presumption of law is that all the property they are in possession of is joint property, until it is shown by evidence that one member of the family is possessed of separate property. The purchase of a portion of the property in the name of one member of the family, and the existence of receipts in his name respecting it, may be perfectly consistent with the notion of its being joint. The criterion in such cases in India is to consider from what source the purchase-money comes. DHURM DASS PANDEY v. SHAMA SOONDERY DEBIA

[6 W. R., P. C., 43: 3 Moore's I. A., 229]

108. ———— *Purchase by one member—Evidence of want of sufficient funds.—Where the plaintiff, a member of a joint Hindu family, claimed a share in certain property as having been purchased with the joint funds, and the defendant alleged that it was purchased by him with his own funds, and it was proved that the joint family property was not at the time of the purchase sufficient, after supporting the family, to leave any surplus funds from which the property in suit could have been purchased,—Held that the presumption of joint ownership was rebutted, and it was for the plaintiff to show the acquisition of the property with joint funds. The party alleging self-acquisition is not in every case bound to show the source from which the purchase-money was derived. DHUNOOKDHAREE LALL v. GUNPUT LALL

1. PRESUMPTION AND ONUS OF PROOF AS TO JOINT FAMILY—continued.

109. ———— *Separate acquisition—Presumption—Onus probandi.—The presumption of Hindu law that any property acquired during the time a Hindu family remains joint belongs to all the members of the joint family does not take away the onus which lies on the plaintiff in a suit to recover a share of the property of proving his case; it merely aids him in proving it. Such presumption is liable to be rebutted by means other than enquiring as to the source from which the purchase-money of the property was derived. That criterion, though the most satisfactory, is not indispensable. Evidence that the property claimed to be joint was purchased in the name of one member only, that after the purchase the members separated, and each member carried on business separately, and that the property was thenceforward in the exclusive possession, and used for the business, of the member in whose name it had been purchased, is evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption that the property was joint. BHO-LANATH MAHTA v. AJOODHIA PERSAD SOOKUL

110. ———— *Receipt of purchase-money by one member—Source of consideration-money for purchase.—The mere fact of the consideration-money for property sold by a member of a joint Hindu family having passed through his hands does not relieve him of the onus of proving the source from which the money came or to rebut the presumption of joint ownership. KOONJ BEHAREE DUTT v. KHETTURNATH DUTT . 8 W. R., 270

111. ———— *Separate dealing by one of several partners—Onus probandi.—The onus of proving separation according to Hindu law is on the party setting it up. According to Hindu law, a separate dealing is no proof of a separation of partners. KHEEROODHUR LALL v. SEETULRAM 2 Hay, 353

112. ———— *Separate acquisition—Onus probandi—Purchase by one member of family in his own name, but with joint funds.—In a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family to recover possession of certain property alleged to belong to the joint estate, but which had been purchased by the defendant at a sale in execution of a decree passed against the estate of R, one member of the family, for his separate debt, the defendants sought to rebut the presumption that the property in dispute was part of the joint estate by showing that, though the members of the family were joint in food, and at particular seasons of the year lived together in the family dwelling-house, they also had separate dealings and funds of their own; and that, while the family had some ancestral estate, several members of the family had acquired separate property from their own funds, and dealt with it as their own without reference to the other members of the family. They also relied on the following facts as showing that the property in dispute was the separate property of R, viz., that during R's lifetime the other members of the family

98. ———— Definition of shares in ancestral property.—A four-anna ancestral share in a zamindari village was owned by two brothers, in which the share of H, son of one of the brothers, was one-half, the remaining half being the share of the plaintiffs, the descendants of the other brother. In the village records there had been a definition of shares followed by entries of separate interests in the revenue records, and since 1264 Fash the two plaintiffs had each been recorded as the owner of a one-anna share and H of a two-anna share thereof. The entire four-anna share had been in the possession of mortgagees from the year 1844 excepting the air lands of which H held separately his own share viz., 10 bighas. On the 7th July 1883 H executed a deed of gift of his two-anna share in favour of the defendants, and caused mutation of names to be made in their favour, surrendering to them at the same time possession of the air land. H died on 31st January 1884, leaving neither son, widow, nor daughter, and the plaintiffs were his heirs-at-law. They brought this suit to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the air land from the defendants. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, and on appeal the District Judge affirmed the decree, holding that the four-anna share was not joint and undivided property between the co-sharers, and that H was in separate

130. ———— Property bonâ fide disposed of before birth of son—Rights of sons—After-born son—Son born subsequently to adoption by father and partition.—According to Hindu law, sons acquire rights only in the property which belonged to their father at the time of their birth, and have no legal claim to property of which a bonâ fide disposition, effectual as against their father, had been made long before they were born. The right of an after-born son to share as a co-parcener divided property depends upon his mother being pregnant with him at the time of a partition. The father of the plaintiffs adopted the third defendant. After the adoption, the wife of the father gave birth to a son. Thereupon the father effected a division of the property with the adopted son, and gave the latter a larger share than he was entitled to receive by law. The father married a second wife, and the plaintiffs were the issue of the marriage. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a partition of any portion of the property which fell to the share of the adopted son. *YEKEYAMIAN v. 133. ———— Burden of proof where property alleged to be ancestral—Property derived by a son from his mother where it originally formed part of his father's estate.—Where a Hindu by will leaves property to another which is afterwards alleged to be ancestral by members of the testator's family, the burden of proving it to be ancestral rests on the plaintiffs. There is no presumption of Hindu law as to its character. P M, a Hindu, died in 1831, having by his will bequeathed all his estate to his wife P and his three minor sons, A, B, and C, and directed as follows: "In the event of my wife's demise previous to my sons' attaining their full age of twenty-one years to entitle them to claim their respective shares of whatever may be left after marrying, etc., then I direct my surviving executors will secure my property and divide the whole among such sons or the survivors of them." Subsequently to the testator's death, his widow P managed his estate, and probate of his will was granted to her alone in January 1832. In 1836 she bought the V property for Rs. 2,801. There was no evidence to show out of what funds this property was bought, but the deed of sale stated that it was assigned to "P, widow and administratrix of the late P M, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." In 1845 the eldest son A separated from the family, and gave a release to his mother P. In 1854 she purchased the X property for Rs. 452, the conveyance being to "P, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." In this deed also she was described as "the widow and administratrix of P M, deceased." In the same year, viz., 1854, the second son B separated and gave P a release. The third son C (the third defendant) continued to live with his mother P until 1871, in which year she died intestate. C then entered into possession of all the property which she had or managed in her lifetime, including the V and X properties. In 1879 he mortgaged these properties to the first two defendants for Rs. 12,500. His sons (the plaintiffs) now alleged those properties to be ancestral, and complained that he and the mortgagees were acting in collusion, that he had charged the properties unnecessarily, and that he and the mortgagees were about to sell them at an undervalue for the purpose of defeating their (the plaintiffs') rights. They therefore filed this suit, and prayed (inter alia) that the claims of the mortgagees, after being ascertained, might be paid off. The defendants denied that the properties in question were ancestral property in the hands of C (the third defendant) or that the plaintiffs, as his sons, had any interest therein. Held that the interest which the third defendant C derived from his mother P in the mortgaged premises was ancestral property, in respect of which the plaintiff had no present right of interference. The Court ordered that on payment holding it adversely to the family; the co-parceners must have abandoned their rights; and where such abandonment is a matter of inference, the co-parceners to whom it has been imputed, must have been in a position to sue. A son to whom his father leaves his self acquired property by will takes the property under the will, and not by inheritance; and as property received by will is held by Hindu law to be received by gift, such property is self-acquired in the hands of the son, and is not subject to partition. Part I of the schedule to the agreement being ancestral under the agreement and will, they (the plaintiffs) were entitled not only to them, but to all the accumulations and accretions thereof, which amounted in value to about ten lakhs of rupees. The University, on the other hand, contended that the accumulations and accretions formed part of the self-acquired property of the testator, and went to the University under the residuary clause of the will. Held (TYABJI, J.) (1) that the effect of the agreement was to make the property specified in Part I of the schedule thereto ancestral property as between the parties to the agreement. (2) That the agreement was confirmed by the will and was binding on the executors. (3) That, although the corpus of the said property became ancestral under the agreement, the accumulations and accretions thereof did not: they were the self-acquired property of the testator, and passed to the trustees under the residuary clause of the will. The plaintiffs had subsequently to the death of M taken possession of the properties in question, and had paid probate duty on them. The plaintiffs had taken conveyances from the executors and had given releases to the executors, and in a previous suit (No. 670 of 1892) the first plaintiff had in his evidence stated that he did not wish to dispute the will, and that he had elected to take under it. Held that by their conduct the plaintiffs had elected to take the properties in question under the will, and could not maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits either under or in opposition to the will. Held also that the sons of the plaintiffs (the minor defendants) were bound by the acts of the plaintiffs. The property in question was not really ancestral. It was only such for the purpose and by virtue of the agreement of 28th July 1881, and the plaintiffs were entitled to waive it or rescind it if they pleased, and their sons could not prevent them from doing so. TRIBHOVANDAS MANGALDAS v. Hindu law texts regarding gains of science establish it as a rule of Hindu law that the ordinary gains of science are divisible, when such science has been imparted at the family expense, and acquired while receiving a family maintenance; but that it is otherwise when the science has been imparted at the expense of persons who are not members of the acquirer's family. of the mortgage debt the properties should be reconveyed to the third defendant and in the event of their being sold, that the whole of the surplus proceeds should be paid to him. The original property was to be regarded as in 1831 the self-acquired property of P M and as having passed under his will. In the absence of any evidence with regard to it, there was no presumption as to its character, and the plaintiffs who alleged it to be ancestral, were bound to prove that fact. On P M's death, his sons A, B, and C, took whatever they became entitled to under their father's will as their self-acquired property, but in co-parcenary according to Hindu law and not as joint tenants according to English law. As to P, she took under the will an equal interest with her sons in the testator's estate liable to be defeated in the event of her death before the sons attained the age of twenty-one years when they might claim their shares. On the sons claiming their shares, one share would be left with P and that share, subject to her incapacity as a Hindu widow to deal with immovable property given her by her husband, would then become hers absolutely. A and B having separated P and C continued to treat themselves as a joint family, and when P died in

The widow of the son who had predeceased his father was at the time of her husband's death a minor she had never cohabited with him or resided with his family or received from them any maintenance.

Held (MAHMOOD, J., expressing no opinion on this point) that the property in suit though inherited by the defendants could not, so far as the plaintiff's rights were concerned be correctly described as "ancestral property" in the defendants' hands from which she would be entitled to maintenance; inasmuch as during the father's lifetime it was not in any sense ancestral and the sons had no co-parcenary interest in it but merely the contingent interest of taking it on their father's death intestate, and, in the case of the plaintiff's husband, such

(two brothers) was not strictly that of members of a joint undivided Hindu family, since although they were joint as to their general concerns, and in some sense joint as members of a family, yet that relation was qualified by the provision contained in a family arrangement whereby each member of the family might take out and use assets derived from a partnership firm for the benefit of his sole and separate speculations.—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to throw his own and his brother's acquisitions into hotchpot and to claim an equal division of them. The arrangement being of such an extraordinary character as to leave it in the power of each member to draw to an unlimited extent upon the assets of the firm, the Privy Council declined to extend the operation of such an agreement one iota beyond its terms, and were therefore of opinion that the High Court was right in drawing a distinction between pledging the credit of the firm and drawing out money actually belonging to the firm. *NURSINGH DOSS v. The immoveables alienated by a father's gift, disputed by his son, partly consisted of zamindari rights in villages which had been at one time ancestral in the family, but had been transferred to satisfy the debts of an ancestor, and had been acquired back by his descendant, the donor. As to one of these villages, the Courts below had differed whether it was self-acquired property in the donor's hands. It had been mortgaged by the ancestors; and the mortgage had been foreclosed under Regulation XVII of 1806, before having been re-acquired by the donor. That the foreclosure and re-acquisition were genuine were facts found upon evidence, including that of prior, concurrent decrees maintaining the foreclosure, as between other parties. Held that the re-acquisition was not a redemption of an estate inherited from an ancestor, and merely encumbered; but that the once ancestral character of this village had been destroyed by the foreclosure. Like the other villages alienated by the father's gift, it was self-acquired by the donor. Other immoveable property comprised in the gift consisted of a malikana payable out of other villages conferred upon the donor by a Government sanad granting a muafi on seven villages to him for life, and declaring that "the zamindars who now pay the revenue will pay it to him, and after him they shall ever pay ten per cent. as malikana allowance to his heir after the deduction

The karta of a joint Hindu family in general is the mere mouthpiece of the family, and not an agent with delegated authority in a fiduciary and accountable relation to the rest of the family. As long as a member of such a family is a minor, the karta is in the position of a trustee for him of the joint property to the extent of his share in it, and is liable to account for it to him when the trusteeship ceases. *CHUCKUN LALL SINGH v. In a suit for partition commenced by one of the brothers and carried on by his representatives, the term having expired,—Held that the true construction was that the above was not a mere agreement to postpone partition, leaving the family status of the brothers uninterrupted, but was an agreement which put them on a new footing. It was shown by the evidence that the profits of the new business were appropriated exclusively by the admitted partners, and A denied that the other brothers had any interest in that business. Held that on those facts the presumption that the new business was started with funds belonging to the joint family was rebutted. Seemle—That if the other members of the joint family were minors at the time the new business was started, the eldest brother had no power to start the new business so as to bind the infant members.

----- Promissory note by member of an undivided Hindu family—Liability of other members—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 4, 26, 27.—The maker of a promissory note (executed in plaintiff's favour), being a member of an undivided Hindu family, had borrowed from plaintiff the money represented by the note and purchased therewith land for the benefit of the family which consisted of himself (the maker of the note), an uncle, and the sons of the uncle. The uncle had always recognized the debt as a family debt, and the land purchased with the money borrowed had, in a subsequent division of property, been allotted to the uncle and his sons, who had also agreed with the maker of the note that they would discharge the debt. ----- Business carried on by one member as manager—Liability of all as joint owners—Ancestral trade and ordinary partnership, Difference between—Contract Act, IX of 1872.—J, the father of the three defendants, established a trading firm in 1865 under the name of J H. He and his three sons lived together as a joint Hindu family. J died in 1872, and the business was continued under the same name by S as the eldest brother and manager of the family. The youngest of the three brothers was a minor at the date of his father's death. The plaintiff sued the three brothers to recover money due on an account signed by S in the name of the firm. The second defendant contended that he had never participated in the property of the business; that he had not resided at the family residence for six years; that he could not be considered a partner of the firm, and therefore was not liable to the plaintiff. Held that he could not repudiate a liability arising out of the ordinary transactions of the firm. During his father's life he was joint owner, and after his father's death he acquiesced in the continuance of the firm under the same name, and ostensibly therefore with the same constitution. He had done no act to divest himself of his share. He had given no notice of repudiation and made no partition, and there was nothing to prevent him from demanding his share of the partnership or claiming to share in the profits. There was therefore nothing to exempt him from the ordinary rule of Hindu law, which makes every member of a united family liable for debts properly incurred by a manager for the benefit of the family. The debt due to the plaintiff for goods supplied to the shop was properly incurred in the course of the ordinary transactions of the firm, and presumably therefore for the benefit of all the joint owners of the firm. The rights and liabilities arising out of joint ownership in a trading business created through the operation of Hindu law between the members of an undivided Hindu family cannot be determined by exclusive reference to the Contract Act (IX of 1872), but must be considered also with regard to the general rules of Hindu law which regulate the transactions of united families. An ancestral trade may descend, like other inheritable property, upon the members of a Hindu undivided family. The acquired under it a title to the minor's share of the property. Upon the question of what is the amount of proof which the law renders necessary to discharge that burden of proof,—Held that where the dispute as to the validity of a sale or mortgage of family property is with the person to whom it was made, and the pecuniary consideration for it has not been advanced for the purpose of discharging an antecedent charge on the property or an old debt incurred by an ancestor; the case of the vendee or mortgagee, as regards the existence of a family need or sufficient beneficial purpose requiring the advance of the consideration-money, must be established by positive proof. But that between a bona fide sale or mortgage for an advance made to pay off a pre-existing mortgage claim or an unsecured debt of an ancestor, and one not made for that purpose, there was this distinction to be observed, that the burden of establishing by direct proof that such prior claim or debt was incurred for a proper family purpose is not cast upon the vendee or mortgagee. He is only required to show this presumptively. But to do so it is incumbent on him to give proof not only of the consideration-money for the sale or mortgage having been bona fide advanced in discharge of an antecedent debt, but also of an enquiry productive of results which warranted his reasonably believing that such debt was a family obligation, and the sale or mortgage a prudent arrangement for its discharge. *SARAVANA TEVAN v. He directed them to maintain his widow and minor sons and to pay the marriage expenses of the latter out of the joint estate, and further directed them to pay his liabilities and, if necessary, to raise money for that purpose by sale or mortgage; the necessary documents to be signed by L and G, "the names of the infants being signed by you as guardians and executors." In case of the death of either L or G, the will provided that all the powers of the executors should be vested in the survivor; the minors to have the same powers upon attaining majority. The will further provided that the executors should, when the minors came of age, "make over to them with explanation the share of each;" and that the four sons should take the property in equal shares. L died after his father leaving a widow and having made a will, whereof he appointed G executor, and G subsequently obtained a certificate under s. 7, Act XL of 1858, in respect of the property of his minor brothers. Thereafter G, by a deed in the English form, which was executed by him alone "as executor of H" and also "as executor of L," mortgaged a portion of the property to the plaintiff to secure R6,847-3-3. Of this sum, R947-3-3 were advanced to G at the time of the mortgage, and were applied by him for the benefit of H's estate, R1,000 were advanced to pay a debt due from L to third persons, the remainder being in respect of debts of H, all of which, however, with the exception of one debt of R100, were barred by the law of limitation. In a suit by the mortgagee for an account and sale, or foreclosure of the mortgaged property, it appeared that one of the minors had attained his majority when the mortgage was executed, and the other some years thereafter, and that both had been informed of the mortgage several years before the suit, and had then raised no objections. No question as to the effect of the limitation law on the mortgage was raised on the pleadings or at the trial. Held by MARKBY, J., that, although the mortgage was not executed in accordance with the will of H, the younger sons had stood by and had taken the benefit of the transaction, and could not therefore question it. A member of a joint Hindu family is bound, when he comes of age, to make himself acquainted with the acts during his minority of the manager, and to express his dissent at once if he disapprove of such acts. No evidence having been offered as to L's estate when the mortgage was executed or that L's widow knew of the mortgage, the suit must be dismissed as against her. Held, on appeal, by COUCH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J., that debts by Hindu law being a charge upon the estate of the debtor, and the intention of H, as shown by the provision in his will for the maintenance of his widow and minor sons, being that the family should for a time continue to be joint, no charge or trust was created by the clause in H's will for payment of his debts, and therefore the fact that in executing the mortgage G professed to act under the will and not as kurta did not invalidate the mortgage. For the same reason, the clause for payment of debts could not prevent the operation of the law of limitation. The manager of a joint Hindu family, or the executor of a Hindu will, has no power by acknowledgment to revive a debt barred by the law of limitation except as against himself. G as kurta of the joint family could not make a valid mortgage of L's share separately from the shares of the other members of the family; his estate therefore was liable to pay the plaintiff the R1,000 borrowed to pay L's debt, and his representatives could claim to be repaid from L's estate. *GOPALNARAIN MOZOOMDAR v. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's application. In 1882 the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant, in which he prayed for a decree giving him possession of the said room on the terms of the decree passed in 1877. The defendant alleged that the house in question was not the joint property of his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba, but that his father Sambhapa was the sole owner; that his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba and his brother Rajaram had no right to mortgage it, and that the money was not required for family necessity. He contended that the decree of 1877 was not binding on him, and, further, that the present suit was barred. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against the defendant. There was nothing to show that at the date of the mortgage in 1875 the defendant was not still a member of the same joint family with Rajaram into which he had been born. In the mortgage transaction all the branches of the family were represented by their eldest members, and the mortgagee (the plaintiff) might reasonably suppose that a transaction entered into by them and apparently necessary for the common interest was really necessary. BALVANT SANATARAM v. To entitle a creditor, obtaining a charge from a polygar on the corpus of the estate, to the security of the estate, proof of imminent pressure or danger of loss, or of such close enquiries as to the position of the estate and the immediate circumstances of the pressure or apprehended danger as to satisfy a prudent and reasonable mind of the truth of an alleged pressure and impending danger, should be given. Per Curiam — Although moneys lent by a creditor to a polygar have been actually expended in payment of paramount charges on the estate, the mere fact of such payments is no evidence of family necessity, nor can the estate be said to derive any benefit thereby, when the annual rents of the estate are more than sufficient to pay for all proper charges on the estate, so as to entitle the creditor to recover from the family estate. When a creditor has made no enquiry as to the necessity for a polygar borrowing money, he cannot remedy the omission by showing that if he had enquired he would have been informed that the money was wanted to pay for Government kist due by the polygar. Per KERNAN, J.—When the rightful owner of a polliam has stood by and allowed another to take and remain in possession of the polliam, and loans have been made to the de facto polygar, the moveable property, purchased by the de facto polygar out of the income or with borrowed moneys in his possession at his death, is assets available for payment of his creditors. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—The moveable property acquired by means of the income of the polliam by a de facto polygar is not available as assets for his creditors in the hands of de jure polygar who succeeded him and who has not admitted his predecessor's title, nor accepted maintenance from him, but moveable property acquired by means of borrowed money may be pursued by the creditor as assets. KOTTU RAMASAMI CHETTI v. obtained a decree against N on the mortgage, and put up the land for sale in execution. It was purchased by the defendant on the 26th October 1876. N and H had previously sold the land to the plaintiff by a registered deed, dated the 30th June 1876. On the 28th September 1877, the plaintiff sued the

was, and the interest of A in the mortgage was not affected by the sale. He affirmed the decree of the first Court, with the variation that the plaintiff and defendant were jointly entitled to the possession of the land. In second appeal it was contended for the defendant that the District Judge ought to have found whether the mortgage-debt contracted by N was for a family necessity and therefore binding on N, and whether the sale to the plaintiff was bona fide. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The defendant had only purchased that which was seized and sold in execution of the decree, viz, the right, title, and interest of A in the land, and H's share was not affected by the sale. Held also, following Maruti Narayan v. Latchand, 1 L. R. 6 Bom., 664, that it was not competent for the Court in this suit to consider the question whether the loan contracted by A in 1872 was contracted by him as manager for a necessary family purpose so as to bind the share of H in the property. Held also that, if the share of H had already been sold to the defendant under the mortgage-decree, the defendant and H were simply tenants-in-common, and there could be no objection to H doing what he liked with his remaining share. *KISANSING JIRANSING v. father died and D separated from his brother. At the time of separation D took nothing out of the family estate, which was very small. He subsequently supported himself by practising medicine, which he taught himself from some medical books which his father had bought for him before his death. D had two sons, viz., M, born in 1846, and H, born in 1849. At the end of the year 1850, D and his two sons came to Bombay, where D continued to practise medicine and established a dispensary. In 1852, having saved Rs5,000 by his medical practice, he set up business as a merchant, and acquired a considerable fortune. His two sons, M and H, who were joint with him, assisted him in his business. On the 7th October 1882, M separated from his father and brother and received as his share of the property a sum of Rs6,000 and jewels and clothes worth about Rs5,000. On the same day M made his will, whereby he appointed his father D executor, and disposed of the whole of the portion of the property so allotted to him, directing that it should be invested and paid over to his son (the plaintiff) on his attaining majority; and, in the event of his dying without issue, that it should go to his (M's) brother, H (defendant No. 2). On the 16th October 1882, M died leaving the plaintiff, his son, him surviving. The plaintiff in this suit contended that the whole of the said property was ancestral property in the hands of M and as such came to him (the plaintiff) unaffected by the will. The defendants contended that the property previously to the division was the joint, but not the ancestral, property of M, his father, and brother; that it was property earned by the joint exertions of D and his sons; that at the division in October 1882, the portion taken by M was his self-acquired property; and that he was entitled to dispose of it by will. Held that whether, previously to the division in October 1882, the joint property of D and his two sons was ancestral or not, as soon as a portion of such joint property was divided off by the father (D) and given to his son M, it became ancestral in M's hands. For, assuming the truth of the defendants' story as to the mode in which the whole property was acquired, it could not be held that it was acquired by the equal exertions of the father and his two sons. The father contributed the nucleus of Rs5,000, and on that nucleus the property was formed by the joint exertions of himself and his sons. The portion, therefore, that came to M did not represent the equivalent of his own exertions only. It represented also a portion of the father's original capital. The property thus being ancestral in the hands of M, he could not, in the town of Bombay, dispose of it by will, even though it consisted of moveables, to the prejudice of the plaintiff's rights. plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that, under the decree passed against the father, the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for fraudulent or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable. Although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so, yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion. This agreement was filed in Court under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act on 4th April 1891, when it took effect as a decree. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to attach the property mortgaged. D having died in the meantime, his sons objected to the attachment on the ground that the decree was fraudulent and collusive. family mortgaged some land forming a portion of the ancestral estate. The mortgagee, having obtained a decree in 1856 on his mortgage, caused 20 gundas of the mortgaged land to be attached and sold, on account of the right and interest of one of the mortgagors only, on 24th January 1871. In a suit brought by the purchaser against a third member of the undivided family, in whose possession the 20 gundas then were, to recover the same from him, as being the property of the mortgagor, whose right and interest therein had been attached and sold,—Held that the share of a co-parcener, being in the estate as a whole and not in any particular part of it, can be ascertained only by taking a general account of the whole estate, and making a distribution in accordance with the results of such account. In taking such account, however, and in making the consequent distribution, it would be only equitable that the share of the co-parcener who affected to deal with a portion of the land as if empowered to mortgage it should, ceteris paribus, if the purchaser takes his place, be so made up as to embrace wholly, or so far as possible, the land which the purchaser bought as belonging to such co-parcener. Held also that to obtain possession of the land purchased by himself the purchaser must file against the other members of the family a partition suit for the ascertainment of the share of the co-parcener, whose interest he has purchased, as it stood in 1848, and for the allotment to himself of that share so far as it can legally and equitably be identified with the land purchased by himself, and that consequently the suit in its present form will not lie. *PANDURANG ANANDRAV v. An attempted mortgage by one of them does not create a charge which can have priority over purchases at execution-sales made bona fide and without notice of it; such purchasers having acquired the right of compelling the partition which the debtor might have compelled, had he been so minded, before the alienation by the sale of his share. As to the invalidity of the attempted mortgage, Sadabart Prasad Sahu v. Foolbakh Koer, 3 B. L. R., F. B., 31, referred to and approved. As to the right of the purchaser of the share at a judicial sale, Deen Dayal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 198: L. R., 4 I. A., 247, followed, and reference made to the distinction mentioned in the latter case, between a voluntary alienation without such consent and an involuntary one as the result of the execution of a decree against the co-partner and a judicial sale thereunder. A father and son composed a joint family, holding a share of ancestral lands. The son mortgaged to a banker, to secure a loan, his interest in the undivided share. His father, without having notice of the mortgage, purchased in good faith portions of the estate forming part of the son's joint share at sales in execution of decrees against the latter obtained by his creditors. Held that the son's interest in the portions so sold passed to the father, whose rights therein as purchaser at the judicial sales were not affected by the mortgage. The mortgagee could, in execution of a money-decree which he might obtain against the mortgagor, personally attach and bring to a judicial sale such parts of the mortgaged property as had not already been sold, but not in virtue of the mortgage. *BALGOBIND DAS v. 248. ———— Ancestral estate held jointly by family under the Mitakshara—Sale attempted by one member of his share—Effect of partition—On death of vendor, right by survivorship of other members—Equity of purchaser to have a lien against survivor.—As to ancestral estate under the Mitakshara, so long as the estate is undivided and the share of a member of the family is indefinite, he cannot dispose of it without the consent of his co-parceners. Held that in a joint family a nephew, having taken by survivorship the undivided share of an uncle, deceased, was entitled to recover that share from a purchaser, to whom the uncle in his lifetime had sold it without the consent of his co-parceners and without necessity. Held also that the purchaser could have no lien on the share for return of the purchase-money. As soon as partition is made—actual partition not being in all cases essential, as, for instance, where the family has agreed to hold their estate in definite shares, or a member's undivided share, in execution of his creditor's decree, has been attached—that will be regarded as sufficient to support the alienation of a member's interest, as if it had been his acquired property. After this sale took place, no other family property remained in which B had an interest. K died in 1880, and R died in 1883, no partition having been made between them and B. In March 1891, B sold his interest in the house to the plaintiff, who in 1892 filed this suit to redeem the mortgage of 1845. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that when in 1878 G purchased B's right and interest in the last remaining portion of the family property, B ceased to be a co-parcener with K and R, and consequently took nothing by survivorship on their death, their shares going to G. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that B's rights to succeed to his brothers' shares were not affected by the sale of his interest in the last item of joint family property to G so long as the latter did not proceed to work out his rights by partition. B became entitled, on the death of K and R, to their respective shares. *GUBLINGAPA SATWIRAPA GIDWIR v. In a suit for ejectment by the vendor's co-parceners, who were minors at the time and had not joined in the sale, it was held that there had been no legal necessity for the sale, which was accordingly declared to be not binding on the plaintiffs. It was, however, found that a portion of the consideration had been applied to the discharge of a mortgage debt, which would have been also binding on the plaintiffs. On its being contended that plaintiffs' interest in the property comprised in the sale should be held liable to the extent of their share of the mortgage debt. Held that in making the purchase defendant was, with reference to plaintiffs, a mere volunteer, and could not as against them claim by way of equity a charge on their shares, even though part of the consideration had been applied towards the discharge of their joint debt; also that, if a purchaser wishes to stand by a sale which is only partially valid, he must be content with the vendor's share; and that, if he wishes to repudiate the transaction altogether, his only remedy is by suit against the vendor for the return of the price paid on the ground that the consideration for the same has failed. *MARAPPA GAUNDAN v. affected by sale in execution of a decree against his father—Parties to suit.—A family, governed by Mitakshara law, carrying on a trade in the names of some of its members, having become indebted to the defendants in a large amount in respect of advances made for the purposes of the trade, some of the head members of the family executed a bond in favour of the defendants for the amount due, and hypothecated certain family properties which stood in their names as collateral security therefor. The amount not having been paid on the due date, the defendants brought a suit on the bond against the persons who had executed it, and obtained a decree which, however, did not direct that the properties hypothecated should be sold. In execution of that decree, the interest of the judgment-debtors in the hypothecated properties, and in other family properties, were sold, and were purchased by the defendants, who subsequently, under their purchase, obtained possession of the shares of the judgment-debtors and of those of their sons. The decree not having been satisfied by those sales, the defendants brought a suit against the remaining head members of the family to have it declared that their interests in the family properties were liable to satisfy the decree, and that suit also was decreed. Under the last decree, the interests in the family properties of the judgment-debtors under that decree were sold, and were purchased by the defendants who subsequently obtained possession of the shares of those judgment-debtors and of the shares of their sons. Some of the sons of the judgment-debtors in both decrees were adult at the time when the suits were instituted. In suits brought, many years after the sales, by members of the family who had not been parties to the previous suits, to recover their shares in the family properties, —Held that the interests of all the members of the family had passed on the sales. Per MITTER, J.—There is no distinction in principle between the case of an adult son and that of a minor son as regards a son's interest in ancestral property being liable to pass on a sale of such property in execution of a decree against his father only; but if an adult son proves that he would have been able to save the property by paying off the debt out of his private funds, if he had been a party to the suit, quære—whether he should not be allowed to have the sale set aside on payment of the debt due under the decree. *BASO KOER v. entertained the question as between the sons and the creditor of the father "whether the attachment of the rest of the family property specified in the plaint ought not, in respect of plaintiff's shares, to be cancelled," and decided it in favour of the creditor on the ground that the debt had been contracted for purposes binding on the family, and further decided that the property so under attachment ought to be sold to discharge the debt, and it was sold accordingly. Subsequently to the decree for partition, and when the defendants were divided from their father, S D (who was the sole judgment-debtor in suit No. 28 of 1871), the house and lands now in issue, which formed no part of the property mortgaged for the debt, the subject of suit No. 28 of 1871, were attached and sold and bought by the father of the present plaintiffs. The question in the present suits was whether the properties last mentioned, not having been attached in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, and not therefore being any of those specifically affected in favour of the creditor by the decree in suit No. 33 of 1872, were liable as part of the joint family property, under the declarations of the judgment in that suit, to discharge the debt due to the creditor of the father by the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871. Held on this question by the High Court (MORGAN, C.J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, J.J.), affirming the decree of the Court of first instance, that these properties were not so liable; that under the decree and execution-proceedings in suit No. 28 of 1871 merely the rights of S D were sold; that nothing in that litigation indicated that it was intended to enforce the debt against the whole property as a debt due from the family, and that the decision in the partition suit (No. 33 of 1872) covered only what was then in question, and could not be viewed as authorizing the attachment of the items of property now in question in execution of that decree. That the present suits were therefore rightly dismissed. By INNES, J.—That the prayer of the plaintiffs (the sons) in suit No. 33 of 1872, so far as it related to the removal of the attachment in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, should have been at once granted. That the creditor in suit No. 28 of 1871 had elected to sue the father alone, and that, though it might have been open to him (the creditor) to have so framed his suit as to have obtained a decree making the joint family liable in persons and property, having failed to do so, he could not afterwards seek to extend the operation of the decree beyond the proper and limited scope of it; and that the Court, in trying the question of the liability of the sons to discharge the debt due to the first defendant's creditor, in effect instituted against them a new suit. Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 198, followed. The authorities reviewed on the question whether in execution of a decree the interests of any but those who were actual parties to it, or those who, on the death of such parties, became their representatives in interest, could be affected. *VENKATARAM-AYYAN v. Plaintiff brought the present suit to set aside the sale of one-half of those lands on the ground that they formed his share, that he was a minor when his father incurred the debt and that his share was not liable for debts incurred by his father. —Mortgage by father—Minor's interests—The plaintiff's mother by their mother, as next friend and guardian, sued defendants, sons of one S. Duraj, s. 230 of Act VIII of 1859 to recover a fourth share of a house and lands of which plaintiffs were dispossessed by the defendants in the execution of the decree in a suit, No. 33 of 1872. The facts were that in a suit, No. 23 of 1871, a decree for money due under a mortgage-bond was passed against S. D., the father of the present defendants and in execution of the decree certain immovable property was attached. The sons of S. D. came forward and put in a claim to the property and applied for the release of the attachment. The claim was disallowed. The sons, being dissatisfied with the order disallowing their claim, brought suit No. 73 of 1872 in which they prayed for a partition, and that their father's share might be released from attachment. Prior to that suit, the attached property had been sold by the sale which was limited to the father's title and interest of the father in the joint property; however, in suit No. 33 of 1872, the Court, having decreed a partition, further the plaintiff's claim to be regarded as a mortgagee of the entire property could not be allowed. The temporary absence of his father, H, owing to the pressure of his creditors, could confer no legal authority on J to take upon himself to mortgage the family property. He had not been authorized by his father, nor did he assume to act for him when he mortgaged the property. The mortgage to the plaintiff was therefore to be regarded as the act of J in his individual capacity, and as such could receive no ratification by the mere reticence of his father. The plaintiff, however, having been in possession, was entitled, if he could establish his title to a lien on J's share, to be put into possession jointly with the defendant if the latter's title was proved.

birth and died with him, and therefore the plaintiffs could not render the shop available for their claim. In the Bombay Presidency, the share of one of the co-parceners in a Hindu undivided family in the ancestral estate may, before partition, be seized and sold in execution for his separate debt in his lifetime. Such a co-parcener cannot, however, by simple voluntary gift or by devise, alienate his share to a stranger, so as to bind his surviving co-parceners after his decease. The purchaser, mortgagee, or other alienee, for valuable consideration, of such an unascertained share, cannot, before partition, insist upon the possession of any particular portion of the undivided family estate. The mortgagee or purchaser of a share in the undivided ancestral estate of a Hindu family takes such share subject to the prior charges or encumbrances affecting the family estate or that particular share. If the mortgage or sale be of a special portion of the family property, and possession of such portion can, on partition, be given to the mortgagee or purchaser, without injustice to prior encumbrancers or to co-parceners, it is the duty of the Court making the partition to give effect to the mortgage or sale, and so to marshal the family property among the co-parceners as to allot that portion, or so much of it as may be just, to the mortgagee or purchaser. Quære—Whether, in the event of it being impossible, consistently with the rights of others, to give possession of the portion mortgaged or sold to the mortgagee or purchaser, he would be entitled to be recouped out of such other portion as might, on partition, be allotted to the parcener whose share in the special portion had been mortgaged or sold. The attachment of a parcener's share in the family property under an ordinary money-decree should go against the share, right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in such parts of the family property (naming and describing them) as the judgment-creditor can specify, and against his share, right, title, and interest in all other parts of the family property. *Kalyanbhai v. In a suit brought by the latter against the other members of the family to obtain a declaration that he had purchased the entire family estate, the defendants, without showing that the mortgage did not validly bind the family estate, contended that, not having been made parties to the suit, they were not affected by the decree, and their shares had not passed at the sale in execution. Held that, as the defence was substantially on the latter ground only, though there was every opportunity given to the defendants to raise the former ground also, the suit need not be remanded; and that the whole estate had passed to the purchaser. *Nanomi Babuasin v. Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family, under the Mitakshara, cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. A decree against indebted fathers, in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title, and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. Held, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. *BHAGBUT PERSHAD SINGH v. Ancestral property—Alienations by father—Son's liability for father's debts—Purchaser—Notice.—Where a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law seeks to set aside his father's alienations of ancestral property, if the alienees are purchasers at Court-sales held in execution of decrees against the father, it is not enough for him to show that the debts, for which the decrees were passed, were contracted by the father for immoral purposes; it must also be shown that the auction-purchasers had notice that the debts were so contracted. The points to be determined in such case are—(1) What was the interest that was bargained for and paid for by the purchaser? Was it the father's interest only, or was it the interest of the entire family? (2) Were the debts for which the decrees were obtained, under which the property was sold, contracted for immoral purposes? and (3) Had the purchaser notice that the debts were so contracted? *Suraj Bansi Koer v. 9. ——— Widow's maintenance—Separate savings.—In a suit by a widow against her step-son for separate maintenance on the ground of ill-treatment, the Court held that, the ill-treatment being proved, a reasonable maintenance ought to be provided. Taking the income tax return as evidence of the amount of defendant's income, Rs 25 a month out of an annual income of Rs 7,000 was held to be sufficient. In an enquiry of this kind any savings which a woman might make by living with her own family should not be taken into consideration; and the degradation which a Hindu widow is expected to live in is a matter of ceremonial observance rather than of law. *HURRY MOHUN ROY v. by mistake against father. Effect of, on sons—Sale in execution of decree against father—Purchase by decree-holder—Interest passed by sale—Nature and extent of mother's share in joint family property, Nature and devolution of.—A Hindu, governed by the Benares school of law, died leaving a joint family consisting of four sons, A, B, C, and D, and a widow, R, to whom he assigned an ancestral mouzah in lieu of her maintenance. All the sons predeceased the widow, C and D dying childless. After the widow's death, a separation took place in 1802 among all her grandsons viz., E and F, sons of A, and G and H, sons of B. At the separation, E withheld possession, among other properties, of the mouzah assigned to R on alleged transfers from R and the widows of C and D. H sued E, making G a pro forma defendant, and recovered a decree for 4 annas of the mouzah in 1864 and G also recovered a similar decree for 4 annas in 1866. Some time after H brought an action for mesne profits and recovered a decree in 1875 against M, heir of E, and also against G, although there was no allegation of wrong against the latter and no finding in the Court's judgment to that effect. In execution of this decree, H caused the interest of G in the mouzah to be sold, purchased it himself, and took delivery of possession on the 19th December 1875. In 1881 the wife of G, together with her two sons (plaintiffs 1 and 2), executed a kholas in respect of one anna six pies of the mouzah to S (defendant 4), the wife of G died in 1885. The present suit was brought by the three sons of G to recover a four-fifths of the four annas of the said mouzah—a three-fifths in their own right and a one-fifth in right of their mother. Among the objections raised by the defendants and pressed by them on appeal to the High Court it was urged (1) that out of the four annas share, two annas were acquired by G collaterally from his uncles C and D, and therefore were not "ancestral property" of the plaintiffs. Held that the mouzah in question retained the character of ancestral property during the lifetime of the widow R, and that, upon her death, it devolved upon her grandsons F, F.

Subsequently the holding the rents of which were assigned having become unfit for cultivation by reason of an inundation of salt water, and the defendant himself having become greatly impoverished by his estate having been injured by the same cause, the amount due for maintenance was not paid, and the widow brought a suit to recover that amount. Held that, inasmuch as the amount of maintenance must be taken to have been fixed with reference to the extent and value of the property, the Court had power to reconsider the allowance and to re-adjust it to the altered circumstances. RAJENDRO NATH ROY v. She also claimed arrears of maintenance for six years prior to the institution of the suit. The Court of first instance passed a decree in her favour awarding her maintenance at the rate of Rs52 a year during her lifetime, but "subject to variation according to the change in defendants' circumstances for the worse." The Court also awarded her arrears of maintenance for three years only (not six as claimed) on the ground that she was only twenty years old, and had always lived with her father and been maintained by him, and that a formal demand had only been made on the defendants three years previously. On appeal, the District Court increased the rate of maintenance to Rs65 per annum, and awarded the plaintiff arrears of six years, holding that the fact of the demand having been made only three years before suit did not prevent her from recovering arrears for six years. Held by the High Court that, although the withholding of maintenance, which constituted the cause of action, might be proved otherwise than by a demand and refusal, yet in this case it had not been shown that there were any circumstances which would amount to a refusal of maintenance. The decree of the lower Appeal Court was therefore, confirmed, except so far as it gave the plaintiff arrears of maintenance for six years, which period was altered to three years. The clause as to the reduction of maintenance in the event of altered circumstances was also struck out. MOTILAL PRANNATH v. BAI KASHI

But where such deterioration is due to the plaintiff's own default in not keeping the property in a proper state of repair, he has no right to ask for a reduction. Per PARSONS, J.—Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved. GOPIKABAI v. MOON, J.—The amount of maintenance should not be determined with reference to the principle that the life of a Hindu widow should be of a peculiarly ascetic character, and that she should have only a "starving allowance." The asceticism enjoined upon Hindu widows are matters not of legal obligation, but only of moral injunction, and cannot be enforced by Courts of justice. The Courts should bear in mind that Hindu widows are by ancient custom debarred from re-marriage, and should fix the maintenance at a sum sufficient to obviate the danger of the widow being driven to immorality. BAIRAVI v. Agreement by zamindar to maintain collateral relations—Construction of agreement—Charge on estate—Impartible zamindari.—The holder of an impartible zamindari estate, in an agreement with the eldest son of his younger brother, settling family disputes, and words to this effect: "I have agreed to give you, through the Collector, every month Rs. 1000 on account of the maintenance of yourself, your younger brothers, three in all, and the rest of your family." The son of the youngest brother now sued the son and successor of that zamindar for maintenance according to the agreement. Held that the payment was not limited to the life of one, or all, of the brothers, but that the issue of each of the three were included, and that maintenance at a proportionate rate had been rightly decreed to the plaintiff as a charge on the estate. *LAKSHMI NARAYANA PRASADA NAIDU v. 60. Right to maintenance of illegitimate member of joint family—Suit by legitimate son of illegitimate member of family to redeem mortgage made by legitimate member—Right of redemption.—An allowance for maintenance was received by the plaintiff's father, that father having been an illegitimate son born to a collateral relation of the head of a family. The ancestral property was in the possession of the latter, who was in a senior line of descent. The plaintiff, who was himself the legitimate son of his father, claimed to be entitled to redeem a mortgage of part of the ancestral estate, that mortgage having been effected by the above-mentioned head of the family. His ground of claim was that he had inherited the right to maintenance and had thus an interest of charge within the meaning of s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1884, to entitle him to redeem. Held by the High Court,—the right of an illegitimate son in a Hindu family to receive maintenance from the family property is a purely personal right, and does not descend to his son. The legitimate son of an illegitimate member of a Hindu family who as such illegitimate son might have had a right to maintenance from the property of his father, had no such interest in the estate belonging to the family as would entitle him to redeem a mortgage made by a previous rightful and legitimate owner of the estate. Held by the Privy Council in appeal,—in the regenerate classes of Hindus a son of illegitimate birth has no part in the family inheritance, but is entitled to maintenance out of his father's estate—a right personal to him and not inherited by his offspring. Chuturya Ram Murdan Syn v. Sahub Purhulad Syn, 7 Moore's I. A., 18, referred to and followed. Held also that the High Court had rightly concluded that the plaintiff had not inherited that right. The authority of the Mitakshara in Ch. I, ss. 11 and 12, was more consistent with a personal right of the illegitimate son. ROSHAN SINGH v. BALWANT SINGH

of it which is allotted to her son on the partition. A separation in food and worship took place between a Hindu widow, her son, and her two step-sons, after which the widow lived as a member of her son's family and was maintained by him. A partition of the moveable property having been made, a suit was brought by the son against the step-sons for partition of the immoveable property, and a decree was made defining the shares of the parties therein. That suit was brought and decreed pending a suit by the widow against her son and step-sons for maintenance from the date of the separation, and for fixing her future maintenance, in which suit she sought to have the maintenance charged on the whole estate left by her husband. Held that, from the separation to the decree in the partition suit, the widow was entitled to maintenance charged on the whole estate, and subsequently to the decree to a charge on her son's share only. But, inasmuch as she had during the former period been maintained by her son, and could not claim maintenance over again from her step-sons, whatever claim her son might have against them for contribution for her maintenance during that time, the suit as against them must be dismissed. Where the annual value of the whole estate was found to be Rs. 70,000 and the proportionate annual value of her son's portion was Rs. 23,333, Rs. 150 a month was held under the circumstances to be a suitable maintenance. *KEDAR NATH COONDoo CHOWDHRY v. 96. ———— Obligation of brothers to maintain widow of a brother who predeceased their father whose property they have inherited.—The principle that an heir succeeding to property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and is therefore under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support, has ample basis in the Hindu law of the Bengal school. It is immaterial whether the property so inherited is moveable or immoveable. In each case it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means, and various other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was, according to the principles of the Hindu law and to the usages and practice of the Hindu people, morally bound to maintain that party. The above principle is applicable to the case of a widow claiming maintenance from her husband's brothers who had inherited her father-in-law's property, her own husband having predeceased his father. Janki v. Nandram, I. L. R., 11 All., 194, followed. that the property in suit, though inherited by the defendants, could not, so far as the plaintiff's rights were concerned, be correctly described as "ancestral property" in the defendants' hands from which she would be entitled to maintenance; inasmuch as during the father's lifetime, it was not in any sense ancestral, and the sons had no co-purcenary interest in it, but merely the contingent interest of taking it on their father's death intestate, and in the case of the plaintiff's husband, such interest, by reason of his predeceasing his father, never became vested. Adhisas v Cursandas Nathu, 1 L R, 11 Bom, 199, dissented from on this point. *Sarvabhai v. 108. ————— Right to select residence.—By the Hindu common law the right of a widow to maintenance is one accruing from time to time according to her want and exigencies. A statute of limitation might do much harm if it should force widows to claim their strict rights and commence litigation which, but for the purpose of keeping alive their claim, would not be necessary or desirable. In a suit brought by the widow against the eldest son for maintenance, it was pleaded that under the will of the husband it was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to maintenance that she should live under the same roof and in joint family with the defendant. It was further pleaded that there having been no demand and refusal of maintenance the plaintiff had no cause of action. Held that there was no condition in the will making the plaintiff's right to maintenance dependent upon her living under the same roof with the defendant, and that she was therefore left in the ordinary position of a Hindu widow, in whose case the right to maintenance from the ancestral home would not be lost by her failure to accept maintenance suitable to her rank and position. NABAYAN-RAO RAMCHANDRA PANT v. Where, however, the plaintiff, a Hindu widow, was satisfied for several years with the maintenance, viz., Rs. 16 per annum, fixed in an agreement executed by her and the defendant, and where the family of the husband was large and the family property small, the defendant being willing to maintain her in his house like the other members, the High Court declined to increase the amount, but gave the widow the right to elect between taking that sum and living separately, or accepting the defendant's offer to receive and maintain her in his own house in the same manner as the other members of his family. RAMCHANDRA VISHNU BAPAT v. 112. ————— Suit against father-in-law—Defence that plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will—Effect of direction in husband's will that widow should reside in family house.—The plaintiff, after the death of her husband A, sued her father-in-law for maintenance. A, although not adopted, had always been treated by his maternal grandfather N as his son. They lived together, and after N's death, in 1873, A and his wife (the plaintiff) continued to live occasionally with N's widow M. A died in 1876 without issue, leaving the plaintiff, his widow, who was then a minor of the age of fourteen. A left a will and appointed M his executrix. In his will he spoke of himself as the adopted son of N (which he was not), and he purported by it to dispose of N's property. He bequeathed ornaments of the value of Rs. 2,000 to his wife, and he directed that, if she resided in the house of his father (the defendant) or in the house of M, she should be paid Rs. 10 a month as maintenance by M; but if she went to live elsewhere, that only Rs. 7 a month should be paid to her. M proved the will. In 1879 the plaintiff left M's house and went to live with her mother; and in 1889 she filed this suit against her father-in-law, the defendant, for maintenance. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will, and further that the plaintiff had failed to obey her husband's direction to reside either in M's house or the defendant's house, and that therefore she was not entitled to a separate maintenance. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to enforce her claim under her husband's will in lieu of claiming maintenance from her father-in-law. In answer to plaintiff's claim, the defendant was bound to show that she was possessed of property out of which she could maintain herself, and he did not discharge that onus by showing that by suing M she might possibly recover the maintenance provided for her by the will. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to separate maintenance from the defendant. The general rule of law is that a Hindu widow is not bound to reside in her deceased husband's family house and does not forfeit her right to maintenance out of her husband's estate by going to reside elsewhere, unless she goes elsewhere for an improper purpose. Quære—Whether that rule applies if she goes to reside elsewhere notwithstanding a direction in

After the husband's death, she is entitled to follow such property in the hands of her step-sons to recover her maintenance her right to which is not affected by any agreement made by her with her husband in his lifetime. A Hindu wife has no property or co-ownership in her husband's estate, in the ordinary sense, which involves independent and co-equal powers of disposition and exclusive enjoyment. Her right is merely an inchoate right to partition which she cannot transfer or assign away by her own individual act; and, unless such right has been defined by partition or otherwise, it cannot be released by her to her husband. NARBADABAI v. All ancestral property is, while it remains undisposed of and unpartitioned, charged with the maintenance of all persons who are entitled to maintenance from the estate. Immoveable property purchased with the capital or profits of ancestral moveable property does not retain the character of ancestral moveable property, but those incidents attach to it which ordinarily attach to immoveable property acquired by and inherited from an ancestor. A Hindu widow with a minor son is as much entitled as a childless widow to maintenance. Where a husband dies leaving separate estates and also an undivided share in joint family property, the widow's maintenance should be met first out of the profits of the separate estates; but if these are insufficient, there is nothing in the circumstance that the husband left separate estates which would debar the widow from having recourse to the joint estate to meet the deficiency. SHIB DAYER v. can be made against the purchaser of a portion of the joint property. If the widow, on the other hand, is not accepting support from the co-parcener, if she lives apart, and if the estate is small and insufficient, it is the vendee's duty, before purchasing, to enquire into the reason for the sale, and not by a clandestine transaction to prevent the widow from asserting her right against the intending vendor. It is in this connection that the doctrine of notice becomes of importance. The knowledge of collateral rights created by agreement in equity frequently qualifies those acquired by a purchaser. The widow's right to maintenance is a right maintainable against the holders of the ancestral estate in virtue of their holding no less through the operation of the law than if it had been created by agreement, and so when the sale prevents its being otherwise satisfied, it accompanies the property as a burden annexed to it in the hands of a vendee with notice that it subsists, though equity as between the vendee and the vendor will make the property retained by the latter primarily answerable. Whether such a claim by a widow against the estate of her deceased husband in the hands of a purchaser is enforceable or not, does not depend upon whether the remainder of the estate in the hands of the heir has been exhausted. What was honestly purchased is free from her claim for ever. What was purchased in furtherance of a fraud upon her, or with knowledge of a right which would thus be prejudiced, is liable to her claim from the first. The relations of the parties are determined once for all at the moment of the sale. There is no authority for the doctrine which makes the claim of widows not entitled to a share of property, in case of partition, a real charge on the inheritance, and ranks the claim of widows who are so entitled as a mere moral obligation. In all cases it is a claim to maintenance merely, not interfering (so long as it has not been reduced to certainty by a legal transaction) with the right of the actually participant members to deal with the property at their discretion, provided this dealing is honest and for the common benefit. The reduction of the number of surviving co-parceners to a single person makes no difference in the widow's legal position. The rights and obligations of the original co-parceners fall at last to the sole survivor. The widows must be maintained by him out of the property, but he may still deal with the estate at his discretion in the absence of actual fraud or of a decree which has converted some widow's claim into an actual right in re. The purchaser from him takes a perfectly good title, and one which, if good at the time, cannot be impaired by subsequent changes in the circumstances of the vendor's family. The judgment-debtor now sued to have that decree set aside, alleging that his wife had since committed adultery and given birth to an illegitimate child. The wife denied the adultery and stated that her husband had become reconciled to her, and that her child was legitimate. It was found that the plaintiff's case was established, and that the defendant's misconduct had been recent, open, and continuous. Held that the decree in the previous suit should be set aside, and that the

At the time of his conversion he had a Hindu wife, who, together with her minor daughter, now instituted a suit against him, praying (1) for an allowance by way of maintenance; (2) that the allowance might be fixed as a charge on specific property belonging to the defendant; (3) for an order compelling the defendant to provide the plaintiffs with a separate house for their residence; and (4) that a sum of Rs. 4,000 might be awarded to them to defray the marriage expenses of the minor plaintiff. Held that the defendant ought not to be compelled to provide residence for the plaintiffs, inasmuch as the allowance awarded to them should cover all such expenses as maintenance and house-rent, and that the claim of Rs. 4,000 for the minor plaintiff's marriage expenses should be rejected; since it was not shown that any marriage expenses had been incurred or were at present required for her, and since if she lived to reach a marriageable age, the matter would then be in the hands of her guardian. Held, further, that the right of the wife and daughter to be maintained out of the husband's and father's property was undoubted, and that, when the Court has made an order directing a sum to be paid by way of maintenance, it has undoubtedly the power to ensure the enforcement of its order, and this could best be done by fixing the allowance to be a charge on specific property. *Jamma v. 5. ———— Marriage of a girl without her father's consent—Husband and wife—Suit by the father to declare such marriage void—Factum valet.—The plaintiff, a Hindu father, sued for a declaration that the marriage of his daughter, which had been celebrated by his wife without his consent, was null and void. It appeared that the plaintiff had for about eight years voluntarily given up residence with his wife and daughters, and that he had several times been requested by his wife to get their daughter, aged eleven years, married, but had neglected to do so. The plaintiff's wife accordingly, having procured a suitable husband for their daughter, informed the plaintiff of the intended marriage; but the plaintiff, instead of approving the course taken by his wife, filed a suit, and obtained an injunction restraining his wife from celebrating the marriage. The marriage nevertheless was solemnized with due ceremonies. The Court of first instance declared the marriage void. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court.—Held, confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the marriage should be supported, under the circumstances of the case, on the principle of factum valet, there being no express authority in the Hindu law-texts, making the consent of the parents and guardians of a girl a condition precedent to the validity of a marriage. The plaintiff, having been informed of his wife's intention to marry their daughter, made no bona fide attempt to marry her, and, after entirely foregoing his claim to all control over his daughter for many years, merely attempted to assert his right without any regard to her interests, and with the sole object of annoying the mother, from whom he had been long separated with his own consent. Quare—Whether Civil Courts would set aside a marriage if a clear case was established of fraud, by both the parties intermarrying, on the rights of the father as guardian of his daughter for the purposes of marriage. KHUSHALCHAND LALCHAND v. 6. ———— Custody—Guardianship—Right of father to give his daughter in marriage—Conduct of father forfeiting such right—Suit by a father to restrain his wife from giving their daughter in marriage without his consent.—The plaintiff and R, the second defendant, were husband and wife belonging to the Prabhu caste, and lived together in the house of the first defendant, who was R's father, until the year 1880. In 1877 a daughter S had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter S. R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters—demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter, and for an injunction against her marriage without his consent. On filing this suit, he obtained a rule nisi for an injunction against the defendants. Held that, pending the hearing of this suit, he was entitled to the injunction asked for. NANABHAI GANPATRAY DHAI-BHAYAN v. 7. ———— Alleged improper marriage of minor threatened pending application for guardianship—Injunction against person not party to application and out of jurisdiction—Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 11, 12—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622. During the pendency of an application for guardianship of a minor girl, it was alleged on behalf of the applicant, the mother, that an improper marriage of the girl was going to be performed by the father, and an injunction was prayed for to restrain various persons (including the present petitioner, who was not a party to the proceeding) from marrying or allowing the marriage of the minor. The lower Court had granted the injunction. Held that s. 12 of the Guardian and Wards Act authorizes the Court to make such order for the temporary protection of the person of the minor as it thinks proper, and this power is not exercisable only after the production of the minor. Held, further, that the mere fact that a person resides outside the jurisdiction of the Court is not per se sufficient to prevent the Court from granting an injunction to restrain him from committing an act in a case such as the present. Held also that this was not a case in which the High Court ought to interfere under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code. HARENDRA NATH CHOWDHURY v. BRINDA RANI DASSI [2 C. W. N., 521]

8. ———— Marriage of a girl without her father's consent—Suit by father to have marriage declared void—Factum valet—Applicability of the doctrine to marriage.—Under the Hindu law, a duly solemnized marriage cannot be set aside in the absence of fraud or force on the ground that the father did not give his consent to the marriage. that the contract had been thereby determined; that she had been willing to renew it, and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U, but that the plaintiff had declined this offer. In proof of her allegation that the contract was a reciprocal contingent contract, the first defendant relied upon the following clause in the agreement: "At the time when the marriages are to take place the marriages of the two girls are to be performed together. When you shall give your daughter in marriage, I also am at the same time to give my daughter in marriage." Held that the agreement of betrothal was not a reciprocal contingent contract; and that the first defendant had committed a breach of the agreement by not giving her daughter K in marriage to the second plaintiff; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the first defendant the value of the ornaments and the ₹700 paid by the plaintiffs as upariyaman together with ₹600 damages for the breach of contract. The second defendant, being a minor, was held not liable, and the suit as against her was dismissed. MULJI THAKERSEY v. GOMTI

14. ——— Suit against father of betrothed girl to have betrothal declared void and for damages for breach of contract—Contract of marriage—Kapole Bania caste.—The plaintiff, who had been betrothed to the defendant's daughter K, sued for a declaration that, unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before the expiration of the month of Baisakh 1952 (May-June 1896), the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff, and that the betrothal was void, and for ₹25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage. The defendant pleaded that his daughter K was not willing to marry the plaintiff within the period mentioned, and that he had no right to force his daughter against her will. At the trial K stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. K was born on the 2nd May 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January 1896). Before filing the suit, the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time, and that he would not force her to marry against her will. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal, and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaintiff assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a locus peni- tentia until Baisakh 1952. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry K at any time before the end of Baisakh did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that K had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. *PURSHOTAMDAS TRIBHOVANDAS v. and a duty to her dependance both as a female and as an infant. But those who seek the aid of the Civil Courts, in order to give effect to this authority, may not improperly be put upon terms which may appear necessary in order to prevent the authority from being abused to the injury of the infant. Where a father or mother is the guardian, the intervention of a law Court can seldom be necessary or desirable. In the case of very gross misconduct and disregard of paternal duty, the Court may interfere even in the case of a father. A Hindu died, leaving a widow and an infant daughter named B. After his death, his widow was forced, through the unkindness of her mother-in-law, to seek refuge at her parents' house. There she died about eighteen months after her husband's death. The orphan B was then brought up by her maternal uncles, S and G. When B became ten or eleven years old, her paternal uncle and paternal grandmother sought, under Act IX of 1861, to take possession of the minor B from the custody of her maternal uncles. This application was resisted by S and G, on the ground that the petitioners had no right to give the girl in marriage, and that their object was to marry the girl to an old Bhatia in Bombay for a large sum of money. The Court found that several Bhatia girls of Dharangan, where the parties resided, had of late been married to old Bhatias in Bombay, the girls receiving large sums of money. And as the girl had never lived with the petitioners the Court ordered that she should, for the present, continue to live with her maternal uncles until the petitioners found a suitable husband for her, to be approved by

to give the girl in marriage to this person, and directing the girl to be made over into the petitioner's custody a month before the day fixed for the marriage. 12. — Betrothal, Suit to enforce—Ceremonies of betrothal.—The plaintiff, on behalf of her infant son, sued the father and guardian of M B to recover possession of M B, alleging that M B had been betrothed to her son, and that under the Hindu law, betrothal was the same as marriage and could not be repudiated, and that the defendant had, on demand, refused to give up M B. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the betrothal had been repudiated, the family to which the plaintiff belonged was guilty of female infanticide, and that it would be illegal, under the Hindu law, to enter into relationship with it. Held that, as according to Hindu law a betrothal is effected by the bride and bridegroom walking seven steps hand in hand during a particular recital, and the contract is perfected upon their arrival, at the seventh step, and may be enforced by the husband on completion of the time, and as the evidence adduced did not show, nor was it alleged or pretended, that any betrothal had been effected or perfected in the way above described, the suit was unavailing. Nowder Khan v. 13. — Breach of promise of marriage—Reciprocal contingent contract dismissed.—Charyaman—Hales Bhatia case. The plaintiffs alleged that by a written agreement, dated the 18th March 1852, the first defendant and her deceased son L agreed that the said defendant A, who was the daughter of the first defendant, should be given in marriage to the second plaintiff who was the son of plaintiff No. 1, and that the father of these two persons should place accordingly. The agreement was executed by the said A as eldest male member of his family, in the name of his deceased father. In pursuance of this agreement, the plaintiffs paid to the first defendant 11700 as upnirman, and they presented A with ornaments and clothes of considerable value. The plaintiffs complained that the first defendant suitably refused to carry out the contract of marriage, and that married her daughter K (defendant No. 2) to another person. They claimed in this suit to recover the ornaments and clothes, together with the 11700 paid to the first defendant as upnirman and 110000 as dower. The first defendant was and both as her personal capacity and as her legal representative of the son L. The first defendant pleaded that neither she nor the second defendant were bound by the betrothal agreement as they were not parties to it; that the contract had been a contingent contract, because the first defendant had agreed to give A (defendant No. 1) in marriage to the second plaintiff only on condition that he (L) should be taken in marriage by the daughter of the third plaintiff, and that L and she were accordingly betrothed, that L had died in 1851.

that the contract had been thereby determined; that she had been willing to renew it, and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U, but that the plaintiff had declined this offer. In proof of her allegation that the contract was a reciprocal contingent contract, the first defendant relied upon the following clause in the agreement: "At the time when the marriages are to take place the marriages of the two girls are to be performed together. When you shall give your daughter in marriage, I also am at the same time to give my daughter in marriage." Held that the agreement of betrothal was not a reciprocal contingent contract; and that the first defendant had committed a breach of the agreement by not giving her daughter K in marriage to the second plaintiff; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the first defendant the value of the ornaments and the ₹700 paid by the plaintiffs as upariyaman together with ₹600 damages for the breach of contract. The second defendant, being a minor, was held not liable, and the suit as against her was dismissed. MULJI THAKERSEY v. GOMTI

Contract of marriage—Kapole Bania caste.—The plaintiff, who had been betrothed to the defendant's daughter K, sued for a declaration that, unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before the expiration of the month of Baisakh 1952 (May-June 1896), the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff, and that the betrothal was void, and for ₹25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage. The defendant pleaded that his daughter K was not willing to marry the plaintiff within the period mentioned, and that he had no right to force his daughter against her will. At the trial K stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. K was born on the 2nd May 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January 1896). Before filing the suit, the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time, and that he would not force her to marry against her will. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal, and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaintiff assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a locus pæni- tentiæ until Baisakh 1952. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry K at any time before the end of Baisakh did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that K had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. *PURSHOTAMDAS TRIBHOVANDAS v. It would be extremely inconvenient to hold that by a deprivation of caste, which may be temporary, a member of a caste loses his marital rights, so as to confer on his wife the power of contracting a second marriage. It is a general principle of Hindu law that the degradation of the husband from caste does not dissolve the marriage tie. BISHNESHER v. MATAGHOLAM [2 N. W., 300

IN RE PURNAMASI DAYI . 8 B. L. R., 395 note

15. ———— Partition effected without taking into account a minor co-parcener—Invalid partition.—A partition effected without reserving any share for a minor member of the family and without the consent of some one authorized to act on his behalf is invalid as against the minor. Three brothers, S, L, and K, were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1862, S and L divided the whole of the family property between them without reserving any share for their brother K, who was then a minor. K lived with L as a member of his family. L died in 1867, leaving a childless widow, with whom K continued to live till his death in 1876. K left an infant son (the plaintiff), only a year old. Subsequently S died in 1887, leaving two widows without issue. In 1889 the plaintiff, being still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover either the whole or one-third of the family property in the possession of the widows of L and S. The principal defences to this suit were (1) that it was time-barred, and (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim more than one-third of the property in suit. Held that the partition made by S and L in 1862 was invalid, as it was made without reserving any share for their minor brother K and without taking him into account. K's son was therefore entitled to recover the whole of the ancestral property as the sole surviving male member of the family. KRISHNA-BAI v. KHANGOWDA . I. L. R., 18 Bom., 197

16. ———— Separate appropriation, holding, and enjoyment—Mitakshara law—Minor—Joint family.—Where there was a separate appropriation, as well as a separate holding and enjoyment of distinct shares, it was held sufficient to constitute a legal partition under Mitakshara law, following Apporier v. Rama Subba Aiyar, 11 Moore's I. A., 75. The fact of one of the members of the family being a minor is not sufficient to render the partition invalid, provided the interests of the minor are properly represented as by a manager appointed under s. 12, Act XL of 1858. Every member of a joint undivided family has a right to demand a partition of his own share. DEWANTI KUNWAR v. DWARKANATH 8 B. L. R., 363 note [10 W. R., 273]

17. ———— Mitakshara law—Deed declaring each member entitled to definite share of property.—By a deed of sharakatnama the members of a Hindu family, governed by the Mitakshara law, declared that each of the members was entitled to a definite fractional part of the whole estate. Held that this was not sufficient to constitute a valid partition according to the Hindu law. Apporier v.

brother, to be zamindar of P. This instrument recited that by the death of R. his uncle, without male issue, I had become entitled to succeed to his estates, unless R's widow, then pregnant, should be delivered of a son. The instrument then provided that, in the event of the said widow giving birth to a son, I should retain the zamindari P, but that, if she gave birth to a daughter, I and his offspring should have no interest in the said zamindari, of which M should be sole zamindar, allowing maintenance to C, the third brother. R's widow gave birth to a daughter. I entered on possession of R's estates, and M took over the zamindari P. C died without issue. M died in 1835, and was succeeded by his only son D, who died in 1861, leaving a widow, but no issue. In a suit instituted in 1873 by S, a son of I, to recover certain villages belonging to the zamindari P from defendants in possession and claiming as purchasers for value from D.—Held by the Judicial Committee, reversing the judgments of the Courts below, that the instrument of 1829 was a renunciation by I for himself and his descendants of all interest in P, either as the head or as a junior member of the joint family, and that its effect was to make P, with its incidents of impartibility and peculiar course of succession, the property of the brothers M and C, as effectually as if, in the case of an ordinary partition between the elder brother on the one hand and the two younger brothers on the other, a particular property had been assigned to the latter; and that consequently, as between D and the defendants of I, the zamindari was the separate property of the former, whose rights, if he left any undisposed of, passed on his death to his widow, notwithstanding the undivided status of the family, in accordance with the rule of succession affirmed in the Shiragunga case, 9 Moore's I. 25. — Definement of shares—Intended separation—Separate enjoyment of profits.—Definement of shares in joint ancestral property recorded as separate estate in the revenue records in pursuance of an alleged intended separation between the members of a joint and undivided Hindu family does not necessarily amount to such separation, which must be shown by the best evidence, viz., separate enjoyment of profits, or an unmistakable intention to separate interests which was carried into effect. AMBIKA DAT v. recorded as the owner of a one-anna share and H of a two-anna share thereof. The entire four-anna share had been in the possession of mortgagees from the year 1844 excepting the sir lands of which H held separately his own share, viz., 10 bighas. On the 7th July 1853, H executed a deed of gift of his two-anna share in favour of the defendants and caused mutation of names to be made in their favour, surrendering to them at the same time possession of the sir land. H died on 21st January 1881, leaving neither son, widow, nor daughter, and the plaintiffs were his heirs-at-law. They brought this suit to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the sir land from the defendants. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, and on appeal the District Judge affirmed the decree, holding that the four-anna share was not joint and undivided property between the co-sharers, and that H was in separate possession of the two-anna share of which the defendants were the donees. On second appeal it was contended that, inasmuch as since 1844 there could have been no separate enjoyment of the four-anna share which was in the possession of the mortgagees, the evidence afforded by separate registration could not prove actual separation. Held that from evidence of definement of shares followed by entries of separate interest in the revenue records, if there be nothing to explain it, separation as to estate may be inferred. Joint family property in the hands of mortgagees may be separated in estate, although there could be no separate enjoyment of the shares so separated. Ambika Dat v. Sukhmani Kuar, I. L. 27. — Execution of document intended to operate as a severance—Power of father to alter status of family.—A partition made by the father is binding on the sons not only in respect of the father's share, but also of their own shares, provided that it is made subject to the restrictions mentioned in the Hindu law. It becomes obligatory by the will of the father as regulated and restrained by the law, irrespective of the consent of the sons. When a father having five sons, three by one wife and two by another, executed in his last illness a document whereby, after retaining a small portion for himself, he directed that the family property should be divided into three-fifths and two-fifths shares, with the manifest intention that from the date of the execution of the document it should operate as a severance (1) of the interest of his sons by one wife from that of his sons by the other, and (2) of the interest of all his sons from his own during his life; but neither the guardian of the infant sons nor the eldest son, who was of age, were parties to the instrument.—Held that this was not a will, but a partition; that it was competent to the father thus to alter the status of his sons; that the question was whether the transaction was bona fide and in conformity with Hindu law, and not one of contract as in the case of a partition between brothers. KANDASAMI v. 34. ————— Decree for partition—Decree awarding plaintiff's share, but postponing possession thereof till plaintiff attained majority Effect of such decree.—On the 21st February 1894, a decree in a partition suit provided as follows: "Plaintiff is a minor twelve years old; until he attains twenty-one years, N (defendant) should for the next nine years annually deliver to him twenty maunds of paddy, and for this year ten maunds; after that plaintiff should be given one-sixth of the family lands; until then defendant is not to alienate the lands." The minor died, and in 1897 his widow, S, as his heir, applied for execution of the decree, claiming seventy maunds of paddy, being the amount due at the rate specified in the decree. It was objected that she was not entitled to execute, inasmuch as the decree had not effected a partition, and that the property at his death still remained joint family property, which passed to the male survivors of the family, and that she was only entitled to maintenance. Held that the effect of the decree was to make the applicant's husband a divided member of his family. It awarded him a one-sixth share of the family estate, and assigned to him a separate allowance. The mere fact that it postponed the actual possession of the share until he had attained the age of twenty-one years made no difference. The share vested in him from the date of the decree, and descended to his heirs. LAKSHMAN SARKA v. NARAYAN LAKSHMAN . I. L. R., 24 Bom., 182

36. ————— Distribution of family estate, followed by separate possession, equivalent to informal partition.—The Courts below found that a distribution of ancestral estate among the members of a family had taken place in former years, and had been followed by continuous possession, without their having any intention to re-adjust or to hold on behalf of the family. The right of an individual member to claim another partition was therefore negatived. The parties, who had long discontinued joint residence, were members of a family consisting at the time of the distribution of four sons left by a Sikh Dewan, deceased. The son of one brother now claimed from the son of another, joining a third who still survived, partition of the property which had descended from the grandfather, with the

The plaintiff, a female, the sole surviving member of the testator's family, sued to recover so much of the property as she might be entitled to. In deciding what was the extent of the property which the plaintiff was entitled to inherit, certain documents adduced as evidencing partition of the family property were held to evidence merely arrangements for separate enjoyment. SANKU v. There being no evidence on the record to show when and by what member of the family certain property in the possession of a particular branch of the family was acquired, and the entry in the survey records with respect to it being different from that of the ancestral fields, that is, the entry being in the name of the representative of that particular branch with no sub-division of shares, and the party seeking partition of such property having failed to give evidence to rebut the presumption arising from the sole enjoyment of the particular branch and the entry in the survey records. Held that such property was the separate acquisition of that particular branch. Moro v. In 1827 C, the only son of G, being in possession of the zamindari, got into debt, and the zamindari was sold in execution of a decree and bought by Government. In 1835 the zamindari was granted to A, the son of C, by Government and a renter. J and his three uncles lived in the same house and participated in the joint family property until 1872, when the plaintiffs claimed to have the zamindari divided. By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the Court of Wards all the moveable and immoveable property, except the zamindari talukh, was divided into four shares and distributed in 1874 between the plaintiffs and defendants. In 1884 the plaintiffs sued for partition of the zamindari, alleging that their cause of action arose in 1872, when the Court of Wards denied their right to a partition of the zamindari talukh. The plaintiff, an undivided member of a Hindu family, sued his co-sharers for division of saranjam and other family property. The defendant No 1 contended that the saranjam was impartible. In any case, he claimed to retain certain sums in his capacity as the eldest representative of the family for the performance of certain offices. Held that, the parties having effected division of the saranjams on previous occasions, the saranjams were either originally partible or had further that, it having lost its it was impartible representative o

88. ————— Inheritance of talukhdari estate in Oude—Sanad recognizing primogeniture, Effect of, as to existing rights of inheritance—Shares held by members of family—Mesne profits on specific and definite shares.—The ordinary rule is that, if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate, they may have partition. Although in a suit for the partition of joint family estate, where the head of the joint family does not account for the profits under the ordinary Hindu law, mesne profits are not recoverable, it is not so where the family has been living under a clear agreement that the members are entitled not as an ordinary Hindu family, but in specific and definite shares. If the enjoyment of those shares is in any way disturbed, the right to sue for profits will arise, as well as the right to partition. A talukhdari estate which, before and after annexation, was subject to the common Hindu law of Oude, viz., the Mitakshara, was restored after the general confiscation of 1858 to the family, which received a sanad recognizing the shares of its members. At the same time, a grant was made to the head of the family as talukhdar of two other villages, and to him afterwards in 1861 was issued a primogeniture sanad of the above talukhdari estate. This sanad could not prevail against the family rights of inheritance; and effect was given to family arrangements, with the same results as regards the two villages. On the contention that the family, by the effect of the sanads, was to have one head and sole manager in the talukhdar, who being accountable to the junior members for their shares of the profits was alone to hold the entire estate by primogeniture,—Held that this kind of managership was entirely unknown to the common Hindu law of Oude; and that apparently the Oude Estate Act, 1869, did not contemplate any such thing. At all events, there must be clear arrangements, such as were not found here, to establish and prove its existence. Partition was accordingly decreed to the members of the family suing for it. Pirithi Pal Sing v. Jawahir Singh, L. R., 14 I. A., 37; I. L. R., 14 Cal., 493, as to the right to partition of a talukhdari estate, referred to and followed; also the same case in regard to profits, where the members of a family are entitled to specific and definite shares not as members of an ordinary joint family. *SHANKAR BAKSH v. In 1870 he declined to work any longer without remuneration, and at a meeting of the shareholders he was appointed managing director and was granted a commission on all sales effected by the company. Held that the commission so received by the defendant was his self-acquired property. Under the circumstances, it might safely be inferred that he did not obtain the appointment of manager by the direct influence of the shares which he held in the company. The gratuitous services which he had for years rendered to the shareholders had influenced them in giving him the appointment, and such influence could not be said to have been created by the direct instrumentality of the ancestral property. The latter continued to live with him, and he managed the property. The first defendant was the son of P's elder wife, and the second and third defendants were the sons of his younger wife. In 1880 the plaintiff was born, and in 1894 he brought this suit by his mother (the younger wife) as next friend for a partition of the whole of P's property, including that which in 1875 had been allotted to the first defendant. The plaintiff claimed a fourth share. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any part of the property which had been given to the first defendant in 1875. The family arrangement then made had been acquiesced in for more than twelve years, and could not be disturbed. The plaintiff could only claim against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who lived with their father in union and with whom the plaintiff himself had lived as member of a joint family. GANPAT VENKATESH DESPANDE v. Further that, as having regard to M's will there was no apparent intention on the part of the testator to convert into money such of his property as consisted of lands and houses, the general rule of law applied, viz., that the property must be held to be real or personal according to the actual condition in which it existed at the testator's death Held also that the defendant's son had a right to claim partition of this property, although the defendant had no son born to him at the time (1852) he came into possession of it. By his will he appointed B, C, and D, members of the joint family, his executors, and gave his widow power to adopt. In pursuance of that power, the widow adopted E. The executors instituted a suit for partition of the joint estates, and the suit was referred to the arbitration of Z. He died without having partitioned the whole of the property, and an application was then made to the Court to determine the partition. The Court granted the application, and the suit came on for trial. The infant E asked for an account to be taken of the dealings of the joint property, and of the rents and profits on behalf of the estate of his late father, from the death of his father up to the appointment of a receiver. Held that in respect of the properties remaining unpartitioned the infant was entitled to an account of the dealings of the joint property and of the rents and profits from the death of his father up to the time a receiver was appointed, but as to the properties already partitioned, he was not so entitled. *SARAT CHUNDER SINGH v. ## 6. RIGHT TO ACCOUNT ON PARTITION.

105. ———— Right to account of past transactions—Share in outstanding debts—Interest.—A plaintiff entitled on partition to half the property in the hands of his brother is bound to bring into hotchpot any ancestral property, or property acquired from ancestral funds which may be in his own hands, but is not liable to account for money received by him from his father while living in commensality with him and his brother, the circumstances of such receipt not being of a kind to impute fraud. Members of an undivided Hindu family making partition are entitled, as a rule, not to an account of past transactions, but to a division of the family property actually existing at the date of partition. In a partition suit, the Court ought not to order an immediate money payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of his share in the outstanding debts due to the family estate, as if such outstanding debts had been recovered and the money were in the hands of the defendant. As a member of an undivided Hindu family is not bound to effect a partition by paying a certain sum of money to his co-parceners, the Court in a partition suit ought not to award interest on money decreed to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. *LAKSHMAN DADA NAIK v. The said dwelling-house was thereafter held jointly by P D and A D on the trust of the deed of 26th November 1849. P D died in December 1849, leaving two adopted sons, M D and another, on the death of whom the plaintiff was adopted. P D also left a will, whereby he directed that the purport of the deed of 26th November 1849 should never be violated. A D died 30th January 1856, leaving a will, whereof he appointed the defendants N D, C G, and S G, executors, and thereby he devised all his property, subject to certain legacies, to C G and S G. By his will he charged his executors not to fail to carry out the agreement. The ceremonies continued to be performed as directed in the deed by the plaintiff and the defendants M D, N G, C G, and S G. of his management on the occasion of a partition or require the other members of the family to accept his ipso facto as to the property subject to partition. What that account should be so as to discharge him from his liability to account as manager, and what objections the other members of the family can take to it, must depend on the conduct of the manager and the other members of the family, the nature of the property and the circumstances of the family, and cannot be stated in definite terms. Members who were minors during the management cannot be taken to have consented to the management, and are entitled, when they attain their majority to hold the manager liable not only for acts amounting to mismanagement, but for their interests, in the absence of such as it exists at the time of the suit for partition. A brother sued his three brothers for partition of their father's estate which consisted of moveables and immoveables and a banking business. As senior member of the family, he also claimed the rajseva (family idol) and the property appertaining to it. The mother (K) of the first three defendants, and M, the widow of a deceased brother of the plaintiff, and N, his aunt, the widow of his father's brother, were also defendants to the suit. The three brothers (defendant Nos 1, 2 and 3) alleged that their father had died in 1863, at which time they were minors, that the plaintiff had managed the estate ever since and had in 1865 obtained minors, and they contended that they were entitled to an account from him of the property at the date of their father's death and of the proceeds income and profits from that date to the date of suit. They contended that, as the plaintiff had been appointed administrator of their estate under Act XX of 1864 he was liable to account to them as a trustee, and was bound to show that all sales, purchases, and other transactions entered into by him were necessary and for their benefit. plaintiff in producing the books of the firm since the father's death which contained an account of all transactions relating to the firm's property and of the moveable and immoveable property, had done all that he could be expected to do whether as the family manager or as certificated administrator of the defendants' interests in the family property. Held also that the circumstance that the plaintiff had obtained a certificate of administration of the estate of the minors and sold their interests in certain houses without the consent of the Court, could not give them a counter claim against the plaintiff, unless they proved that they had been prejudiced by the sale. As to ornaments purchased since the death of the father, it was directed that they should be brought into hotchpot by all the parties in making the partition. As to remissions of tenants' rent and compromises of suits although a considerable loss was shown to have resulted from them it was held that the defendants had failed to show that they were improper or uncalled for and there was no evidence to make the plaintiff himself liable for them or to forbid their being transferred to the general account. The losses in trade also were properly debited to the general business of the firm and the plaintiff was not personally liable for them. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to take the rajseva (family idol) and keep it with the property appertaining thereto as the family idol and the property thereof with liberty to such members of the family as are or shall become marajadas to have access to it for the purpose of worship. Held also that K the mother of the first three defendants (step mother of the plaintiff) was entitled on this partition to a one fifth share in the estate. DAMDAS MANERLAL v. B, having been absent and unheard of for more than seven years, might be presumed to be dead under s. 103 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872); and G, as one of his two survivors, was entitled to a moiety of his property. In 1854 two suits had been brought in the Supreme Court—one by M D and the present plaintiff, and the other by A D—in which suits decrees were made declaring the will of P D and the agreement of 26th November 1849 to be fully proved and established and binding on A D and his heirs and the representatives of P D. It was found on the evidence in the present suit that the agreement of 26th November 1849 was not fraudulent, that when A D died the estate belonging to the representatives of P D, independently of the property set apart was more than sufficient to meet any claims against the decrees of the Supreme Court. Held that the family dwelling house was not absolutely dedicated by the deed of 26th November 1849 to the worship of the deities and performance of the ceremonies mentioned therein and therefore was not inalienable. But the prohibition in the deed of 26th November 1849 against partition of the family dwelling house for twenty years after the death of the survivor of P D and A D implied also that there should be no alienation of it for twenty years. for idol.—By an agreement entered into between five brothers, who formed a joint Hindu family, it was provided that none of the parties nor their representatives, nor any person should be able to divide the real and personal property belonging to the family into shares, that while the male descendants of any of the brothers lived the sons of the daughter of the deceased persons should not be entitled to the real and personal properties, nor to the proceeds thereof, that none of the brothers nor any of their male descendants should be able to adopt a son that during the lifetime of the brothers or of the one of them who should be the last survivor their earnings should be regarded as joint property, and that if any brother or son of a brother separated himself from the family he should only get $120,000 as his share. The agreement further provided for the maintenance of widows and infant children and that the sum of two lakhs of rupees should be taken from the joint khata for the purpose of carrying on certain business. The family dwelling house had belonged to the mother of the brothers. She made a gift by deed of the house and lands and houses appertaining thereto to an idol and appointed her sons managers and directed that they should live in the house, and should not have power to partition or alienate any portion of the properties settled. 1. ———— Expectancy—Sale or mortgage of reversionary right in ancestral property—Onus of proof in contracts by reversioners as to their expectant rights—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) s. 6, cl. (a).—The Hindu law which prevails in the N.-W. Provinces recognizes no power in a reversioner to sell or mortgage his interest in expectancy, even although he may be the heir apparent. It is necessary, when money-lenders in this country seek to enforce against the property of a Hindu family a contract of mortgage made by a reversioner, who, although of age at the time, was then still of tender years and without experience of business, for the Court, when the question is raised, to be satisfied that the reversioner understood the nature of the transaction and the effect of the contract which he was entering into, or that the reversioner of the family property, in which the reversioner had an estate in expectancy only, was liable for the debt in respect of which the mortgage is sought to be enforced, and that no unfair advantage was taken of the reversioner's youth and inexperience. *ACHHAN KUAR v. 8. — Evidence Act, ss. 107, 108—Presumption of date of death—Upon the death of a sonless Hindu, his separate estate devolved upon his two widows, the first of whom had a daughter, who had two sons, G and S G, having a son D. After the death of the first widow, the second came into sole possession of the property and so continued till her death in 1882. At that time S was still living, but G had not been heard of by any of his relatives or friends since 1869 or 1870. In 1884 a purchaser from S claimed possession of the whole estate, and was resisted by D on the ground that the estate had, on the death of the second widow, devolved on his father and S jointly, and S was not competent to alienate it. Held that the question whether the defendant's father was living at the time of the death of the second widow was a question of evidence. The burden of proof was on the defendant's father to show that S was dead prior to the time according to the presumption.

The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heir. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the death of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead and there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. RANGU HALAJI v. MEDITEPPA

the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, were not the next heirs, could not maintain the suit. *GOOSHAFEN
TEEKUMJEE v. PURSOTUM LALLJEE* . 3 Agra, 238

21. ————— Suit to set aside adoption—Right of suit.—Although a suit, to contest an adoption made by a Hindu widow of a son to her deceased husband, may be brought by a contin-gent reversionary heir, yet it is not the law that any one who may have a possibility of succeeding to the estate of inheritance held by the widow for her life is competent to bring such a suit. The right to sue must be limited. As a general rule, the suit must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir, that is to say, by the person who would succeed to the estate if the widow were to die at the time of the suit. But it may be brought by a more distant heir, if those nearer in the line of succession are in collusion with the widow, or have precluded themselves from interfering. The rule laid down in *Bhikaji Apaji v. Jagannath Vithal, 10 Bom., A. C., 351, approved. Reference made to Koer Golab Singh
v. Rao Kurun Singh, 14 Moore's I. A., 187.* If the nearest heir had refused, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings; or if he had precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or had colluded with the widow, or had concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumable heir would be, in respect of his interest, competent to sue.
In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant heir claimed to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he was or was not competent in that respect to sue; and whether it was requisite or not that any nearer heir should be made a party to the suit. In a suit to have an alleged adoption set aside, the plaintiff, a minor, through his guardian, claimed to sue, on the strength of being the adopted son of the husband of a daughter of a brother of the father of the deceased, under whose authority the adoption was alleged to have been made by the widow, the defendant. The Judicial Committee, without deciding that, as an adopted son, this minor had the same rights as a naturally-born son, and without deciding that he would have been entitled, in default of nearer relations, to succeed to the estate of inheritance, after the death of the widow, pointed out that he could only have succeeded as a distant bandhu, and that he had not a vested, but at most a contingent interest. And held that, there being in fact heirs nearer in the line of succession than this minor, the grounds of his competence to sue in respect of his interest, assuming that interest to exist, should have been made out in the manner above indicated. *ANUND

Also per MAHMOOD, J., that the existence of female heirs, whose right of succession cannot surpass a "widow's estate," does not affect the status of the nearest presumptive reversionary heir to the full ownership of the estate, and that such presumptive heir can maintain a suit for declaratory relief such as was prayed for in the present suit, irrespective of the question of collusion or concurrence by such female heirs in the alienation by a childless Hindu widow or other female heir holding a similar estate. *Chunderkoomar Hazaree v. [5 C. L. R., 49]

49. ———— Alienation by widow—Fraud, Proof of.—A Hindu widow being in possession of certain lakhiraj lands in which she had a life-interest, the zamindar brought a suit against a minor reversioner and others to resume the land, obtained an ex-parte decree, and, whether under colour thereof or not, afterwards obtained possession. The widow, who was then dispossessed, brought a separate suit to recover the property, in which the reversioner, who had meantime come of age, was joined as a co-plaintiff. Owing to a petition presented by the widow, this suit was treated as having come to an end. Held that, in the circumstances, and the consequent jeopardy to the title of the reversioners, the reversioner above referred to was competent, without showing fraud on the part of the widow, to bring a suit to have the land reduced to his possession, and to prevent the zamindar from acquiring title by adverse possession. The widow not only failed to occupy and manage the estate, but, in collusion with the other defendants claiming under a hostile title, abandoned her rights, alleging that her husband was not separate, but a member of a joint family, and left the hostile holders undisturbed. To preserve the separate estate from becoming extinguished by the operation of the law of limitation, it was necessary to remove the adverse occupants and to place the estate in the possession of some person to be appointed to represent it; and as the widow (the legal representative) never was in possession and did not ask for it, but repudiated all claim to it, it was held that no one had a better right to the possession than the plaintiff, and possession was accordingly decreed to her as manager during the widow's lifetime. ### 4. RELINQUISHMENT BY WIDOW TO REVERSIONERS.

52. ———— Effect of relinquishment by female—Title of reversioner on relinquishment.—The succession of females according to Hindu law is not regular succession and is not based upon the ordinary theory of spiritual benefit. Therefore, if they relinquish their rights in favour of the reversioner, the case is again brought back to the normal state of succession, the effect being to vest in him a complete title. *GUNGA PERSHAD KUR v. 53. ———— Effect of relinquishment by widow—Consent of reversioners—Relinquishment to second reversioners.—According to Hindu law, a widow in possession can relinquish, and, by relinquishing, anticipate for the reversioners their period of succession. 54. ———— Surrender of life-estate—Title of reversioners.—The surrender of her estate by a Hindu widow, or mother to persons who at that time are unquestionably the heirs by Hindu law of the person from whom she has inherited it, vests in those persons the inheritance which they would take if she at that time were to die. *Shama Soonduree v. In a suit brought on the basis of the ikarnama to set aside a lease granted by the widow,—Held that there is nothing in any statute law which renders such a provision inoperative, neither ss 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) nor any principle underlying them is applicable to it it is not an unreasonable provision, there was no absence of equity in the arrangement, and effect should be given to it KULDIP SINGH v KHYRANI KOER

VEDAMUTHU SHOLAGAN*

[I. L. R., 19 Mad., 337]

68. ———— Sale by a Hindu widow—Whether the reversioner consented that she should sell the whole inheritance, or only her life-estate.—The sale by a Hindu widow of a share in village lands of which share her husband had been proprietor, having taking place without justifying necessity, could extend no further than to transfer her interest as a widow, for life, unless the consent of the reversionary heir had been given to her selling the whole inheritance. The appellant's case was that this consent had been given. The evidence of its having been given was the fact that this heir, having been appointed the widow's mukhtar for the purpose, had executed, on her behalf, a sale-deed containing words to the effect that the vendee had become (as the English translation on the record expressed it) "absolute" owner of the share sold. This heir, however, received no consideration to induce him to relinquish the reversionary title; and, on the death of the widow, his descendant claimed the inheritance against the vendee's son, then in possession. Held that it had not been made so clear that the conveyance transferred the whole estate of inheritance as to cause it to follow that the reversionary heir, when shown to have consented to the transfer by the widow, must be taken to have consented to a transfer by her of the whole estate of inheritance. Therefore, the judgment of the Appellate Court below, that the transfer extended only to the widow's life-estate, must be maintained. JIWAN SINGH v. MISRI LAL

A suit was instituted against S and his son by C, on the allegation that he and J, who were collateral relatives of the widow's husband, were entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed in moieties to the properties left by her as her stridhan, and claiming recovery of possession of half her property. In defence, the adoption was pleaded, and another plea was that the widow had left a brother who, in the absence of the adoption, would succeed to the property to the exclusion of the plaintiff. The Court of first instance held that the alleged adoption had not been proved. In the lower Appellate Court the plea as to adoption was given up. Held that, upon the facts found, the plaintiff was the heir of the deceased widow, and as such entitled to succeed to her stridhan under the Hindu law. *Thakoor Deyhee v. After P's death, his widow N married again and had a son who was the father of the plaintiff. The plaintiff in this suit claimed to recover the property of D from the defendants who had taken possession. He contended that the property having devolved on A through a female must continue to descend in that line, and that he was entitled. The defendants claimed as heirs of A. Held that on D's death A was the nearest bandhu relation both of D and her father L, and consequently became full owner of the property. 31. ————— Rule of damdupat—Mortgage by Mahomedan to Hindu—Assignment of mortgaged land by mortgagor to Hindu assignee—Subsequent suit by mortgagee against assignee—Interest.—A, a Mahomedan, having in 1869 mortgaged certain land for R61 to B, a Hindu, afterwards assigned it to C, who was also a Hindu. At the date of this assignment the interest due on the mortgage (R122-15-10) was much more than the principal debt. B (the mortgagee) subsequently sued A and C for R270, being R61 for principal and R209 for interest. A did not appear. C contended that, the plaintiff and himself being Hindus, the law of damdupat applied, and that only as much interest as principal could be recovered. The lower Courts passed a decree for the principal (R61) together with all interest due at the date of the assignment to C. They disallowed subsequent interest, as the amount then due was already more than the principal. On appeal to the High Court,—Held (confirming the decree) that C was not personally liable to pay anything at all, but that land which he had purchased was charged with the amount due at the date of his purchase. Unless, therefore, he wished the land to be sold, he should pay that amount. The rule of damdupat did not apply in this case to the original mortgagor, who was a Mahomedan. He charged the land with a debt which included principal and interest, and he and his land were liable for both. He could not by any assignment prejudice his creditor or reduce the amount due to him, nor could he by assigning his land to a Hindu free it from any charge that existed on it at the date of the assignment. *HARILAL GIRDHARLAL v. 32. ————— Rule of damdupat—Mortgage—Original mortgagor a Hindu—Assignment of mortgage to Mahomedan purchaser—Suit by Mahomedan purchaser for redemption—Rule of damdupat how far applicable.—A Hindu mortgaged his property in 1843 to a Mahomedan for R150, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. On the 5th April 1880, the Hindu mortgagor's interest was sold to the plaintiff, who was a Mahomedan. In March 1893, the plaintiff sued for redemption, both parties to the suit being Mahomedan. Held that as long as the mortgagor was a Hindu (i.e., until 1860) the rule of damdupat applied, and that, as soon as the interest doubled the principal, further interest stopped. The sum of R300 was therefore the full amount of debt for which the land could be charged and liable in the hands of a Hindu debtor. But on the 5th April 1880 the plaintiff (a Mahomedan) became the debtor. The rule of damdupat then no longer applied: the stop was removed, and interest again began to run. The decree therefore ordered the plaintiff to redeem on payment of R300 (i.e., double the principal R150) with further interest at R12 per annum from the date of his purchase (5th April 1880) until payment. *ALI SAHEB v. The widow (F) on her husband's death became entitled to a widow's estate in his immoveable property, and accordingly entered into possession and management thereof. Under certain agreements made between her and one K, the latter received the rents of certain portions of the said immoveable property, and in consideration paid F certain fixed annual sums. On the 26th May 1883, there was a balance of Rs. 1,787-10-3 due from K to F in respect of the yearly privilege of recovering and receiving the said rents. F died intestate on the 18th December 1884, and the plaintiff, having obtained letters of administration to her estate, demanded payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,787-10-3 from K. It appeared that, after F's death, K had paid this sum to G, who was F's grandson and the reversioner expectant on the determination of F's widow's estate, and on her death had succeeded to all the immoveable property as the right heir of her husband M. The question was whether the said sum of Rs. 1,787-10-3 belonged to F's estate, or remained portion of the immoveable property of M, and as such properly payable to G as his heir. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover it as part of F's estate. There was nothing to show it to be "savings or accumulations" so as to give it to the heir to her husband's estate. RIVETT-CARNAC (ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL, BOMBAY) v. JIVIBAI . . . . . I. L. Under a gift of moveable and immoveable property by a Hindu to his wife, the wife takes only a life-estate in the immoveable property, and has no power of alienation over it, while her dominion over the moveable property is absolute. A Hindu wife takes by the will of her husband no more absolute right over the property bequeathed than she would take over such property if conferred upon her by gift during the lifetime of her husband, and whether in respect of a gift or a will, it is necessary for the husband to give her in express terms a heritable right or power of alienation. *KOONJBEHARI DHUR v. On appeal, plaintiff contended that he was the heir of the donee, and that, under the deed of gift, she had no power to alienate. Held that, from the wording of the deed of gift, it appeared that the husband intended to give and did give to his wife an heritable estate in, and power of alienation over, the property the subject of the gift, and therefore the sale by the wife was valid. *Koonybehari Dhur v. HINDU LAW—WIDOW—continued.2. POWER OF WIDOW—continued.(b) POWER OF DISPOSITION OR ALIENATION.

38. ———— Power of alienation—Alienation for religious or charitable purposes—Necessity—Right of Crown taking property to set aside alienation—Onus probandi.—Under the Hindu law, a widow, though she takes as heir, takes a special and qualified estate. If there be collateral heirs of her husband, she cannot of her own will alienate the property except for special purposes. For religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes. To support an alienation for the last, she must show necessity. The restrictions on her power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and independent of the existence of heirs capable of taking on her death. If for want of heirs the property, so far as it has not been lawfully disposed of by her, passes to the Crown, the Crown has the same power of protecting its interest as an heir by impeaching any injurious alienation by the widow. The onus is on those who claim under an alienation from a Hindu widow to show that the transaction was within her limited powers. COLLECTOR OF MASULIPATAM v. CAVALY VENCATA NARAINAPAH

[2 W. R., P. C., 61; 8 Moore's I. A., 529]

39. ———— Power to dispose of property by will—Right to dispose of.—A Hindu widow succeeding to the immoveable property of her deceased husband, and also claiming as heir to her only daughter, who died after her father childless and unmarried, is only entitled during her life to a widow's estate. The doctrine laid down in the original Court that ancestral property after partition can be disposed of by will, in the same way as self-acquired property, disapproved of, as opposed to the authorities and general spirit of Hindu law. LAKSHMIKAI v. GANPAT MORABA. GUNPAT MORABA v. LAKSHMIKAI . . . . . 5 Bom., O. C., 128

40. ———— Widow of Hindu having undivided property—Self-acquired property—Payment of debts.—The widow of an undivided Hindu has no right to sell his property for payment of his debts, even though it be self-acquired. NAMASIVAYA CHETTI v. SIVAGAMI . . . . . 1 Mad., 374

41. ———— Alienations by a widow of her husband's estate in order to pay his time-barred debts—Widow's status as distinguished from that of a manager—Liability of alienees—Rights of reversioners.—According to the Hindu law, a widow is competent to alienate her husband's estate for the purpose of paying his debts, even though they may be barred by the law of limitation. Her alienations for such a purpose are legal and binding on the reversionary heirs. A widow stands in a different position from that of a manager of a joint family. The latter can act only with the consent, express or implied, of the body of co-parceners. In the widow's case, the co-parceners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can therefore do what the body of co-parceners can do, subject always to the condition that she act fairly to the expectant heirs. The rights of these heirs impose, on persons dealing with a widow, the obligation of special circumspection, failing which they may find their securities against the estate to be of no avail after the widow's death. *CHIMNAJI GOVIND GODBOLE v. 43. ———— Power to dispose of immoveable property by will—"Inherited."—A widow has no power to dispose by will of immoveable property inherited by her from her husband. The word "inherited" used in the Mitakshara, in regard to a woman's stridhan, does not include immoveable property so as to make it her peculium, but refers only to personal property over which alone she has absolute dominion. *GOBURDHUN NATH v. 45. ———— Right to alienate stridhan, except land.—A Hindu wife or widow may alienate her stridhan, whether it be moveable or immoveable, with the exception, perhaps, of lands given to her by her husband. DOE D. KULAMMAL v. KUPPU PILLAI . . . . . 1 Mad., 85

[5 Mad., 111]

She may dispose of her stridhan by gift, will, or sale, unless it is immoveable property given her by her husband. TEENCOWREE CHATTERJEE v. DINONATH BANERJEE . . . . . 3 W. R., 49

60. ————— Power to dispose of property by will.—Where a widow of a Hindu who had received a share of the estate of her husband, consisting of moveable and immoveable property, from her co-widows, purported to dispose of her property by will to the prejudice of the co-widows, —Held that the alienation was invalid. *GURUVI REDDI v. 61. ————— Grant of money in lieu of maintenance—Power of disposal.—Where a sum of money was given to a widow, without restriction, in lieu of maintenance, by her deceased husband's family, —Held that it became absolutely hers, and that she could dispose by will of landed property acquired by means of it. NELLAIKUMARU CHETTI v. MARAKATHAMMAL . I. L. R., 1 Mad., 166

62. ————— Gift—Interest with husband in joint property.—Where a Hindu wife has a joint interest with her husband in landed properties, partly acquired by purchase, partly (as sowdayakam) by gift from her father, —Held that she was entitled on her husband's death to part with her interest in those properties. *MADHAVARAYYA v. 63. ————— Restriction on alienation—Proof of legal necessity.—The restrictions on a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate. Their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. The plaintiffs sued as purchasers of the equity of redemption from S, a Hindu widow, to redeem a mortgage effected by her husband B. The mortgage deed recited that a portion of the mortgaged land was held by B, not as owner, but as mortgagee from a third party. S was alive when the suit was instituted, but she died after the settlement of issues. The plaintiff then filed a supplementary claim to succeed as B's next heir. The defendants (the sons of the mortgagee) contended that the plaintiff could not redeem because the sale by S was invalid. They also claimed compensation for loss of the rents and profits of a portion of the mortgaged property redeemed from B by the original owner. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim. In appeal, the District Judge confirmed his decree, being of opinion that the sale was valid as against the defendants, because there were no collateral heirs. On appeal to the High Court, —Held, following the decision of the Privy Council in Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Venkata Narrainpah, 2 W. R., P. C., 61 : 8 Moore's I. A., 529, that the plaintiffs, who were bound to make out their title, could not succeed on the strength of an alienation by a Hindu widow, unless they proved that the alienation was made for purposes which the Hindu law recognized as necessary. *DHONDO RAMCHANDRA v. Therefore, when the widow of the adoptive father, nearly thirty years after his death, gave effect to his undertaking by executing a deed of gift of his property in her hands in favour of the adopted son, —Held that such alienation was valid as against the next heir by blood of the adoptive father, and he could not, on the death of the widow, avail himself of the plea of limitation which she had waived. from recovering from an alienee, after the other co-widow's death, property given by way of partition to the latter and alienated by her. A widow may alienate for her life any estate which comes to her by virtue of her widowhood, and may therefore enter into such a deed as will preclude her from recovering during her life property which she has alienated, to the full extent of such alienation, provided that it does not extend beyond her life-interest. RAMAKRISHNAN v. 77. ———— Right of widow to sell property inherited from her husband—Suit by reversioner to set aside sale by widow.—B having during his lifetime mortgaged certain property, the income of which was sufficient only to pay interest on a portion of the mortgage-debt, his widow, after his death, sold it before the mortgage-debt fell due. The reversioners sued to set aside the sale. Held that, although there might have been no absolute necessity for the widow to sell the property to provide herself with maintenance, still, as there was no other family property, the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, and the sale by the widow ought to be supported. A widow, like a manager of the family, must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided she acts fairly to her expectant heirs. VENKATJI SHRIDHAR v. VISVNU BABAJI BERI . I. L. R., 18 Bom., 534

78. ———— Alienation by widow without legal necessity.—The property in dispute (consisting of 12 thikans or plots of land) was originally held by A and B as tenants-in-common, and they divided the income according to their respective shares. After A's death, his widow adopted C on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that C was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. All these alienations to the defendant were made without any legal necessity. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased C's rights, and, on the widow's death, sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit. Held that A's widow, not having higher powers than those of an ordinary Hindu widow who succeeds as heir to her sonless husband, could only make valid alienations for purposes warranted by the law. As no legal necessity was shown in respect of the alienations in question, which were made long after disputes had commenced between her and her adopted son, they were not binding on him or on his alienee, the plaintiff. ANTAJI v. balance of interest alleged to be due on three previous mortgages, which had been executed by her husband in his lifetime. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagee as to her authority. Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded her powers. By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that, during the life of his minor son, she should not have power to transfer without legal necessity; and that she should have power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts. Held that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid. Notes promising to pay interest, additional to that contracted for in the mortgages, had been signed by the husband, which it was held could not affect the right to redeem, being unregistered. RAM v. She assigned the decree for mesne profits and subsequently died. Upon the assignee attempting to execute the decree in respect of mesne profits, the reversionary decree contended that he had no right to do so on the ground that his assignor, the widow, could not alienate the mesne profits so as to enure beyond her lifetime. Held that the right to mesne profits under a decree is not immoveable property, and that the decree was validly assigned. SAMINATHA PILLAI v. The property had come into R's possession incumbered with a mortgage effected by her husband, and in order to redeem that mortgage, she mortgaged the property again to one Y. She subsequently paid off Y's debt, amounting to Rs. 629, and in 1876 she mortgaged the property for Rs. 999 to B, who was put into possession. In 1881 she adopted the plaintiff, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the property. He contended that R had no power to alienate or mortgage the ancestral immoveable

The widow invested the sum so received in Government securities, and twenty years afterwards created with this fund a trust in favour of one G C R, and appointed B trustee thereof. On the death of the widow, the daughters of the testator tried to set aside this trust, claiming the funds as a portion of their father's estate with which the widow had no right to deal. Held that, as the accumulations were handed over to the widow by the person entitled to the reversion after the estate had vested in him, and a release had been entered into between them, no presumption arose that the fund in question had been accumulated by the widow for the benefit of other heirs of the testator, and that, there being no such presumption, the facts of the case must be looked at to ascertain the intention of the parties regarding this fund. Held as to this that the conduct of the widow evidenced no intention to accumulate the sum received by her for the benefit of any person but herself, or that she ever intended to give up the power of disposing, expending, or dealing with it in any way. *SOWDAMINI DASSI v. 99. ——— Execution of decree against widow as representing estate—Sale in execution of decree—Widow’s interest under deed of adoption—Right of purchaser against adopted son.—The plaintiff sued to follow into the hands of the defendant certain property to which the latter had by transfers acquired the title of the purchaser at an auction-sale held in June 1843. The ground of his claim was that the late owner, who died before the sale, had left his widow a permission to adopt a son, and thereupon in 1856 she had adopted the plaintiff. His contention was that the sale was of the widow’s interest merely, the permission to adopt having given to her, in the event of an adoption, a life-interest in the property, and that, upon her death in 1865, his interest accrued. Held that, as the proceeds of the execution-sale were not applied to satisfy only a liability incurred after the owner’s death, but also decrees for other debts, for which the estate was liable, there was no substantial ground to impeach the long title acquired by the respondent. DEBENDRO NARAIN ROY v. 100. ——— Execution of decree against widow for arrears of maintenance—Sale of right, title, and interest of widow—Maintenance of widow—Charge on estate of husband.—A Hindu died, leaving two sons, S and M, who became separate in estate. S died, leaving a son, K, who became a lunatic. M died, leaving a widow, N, and two sons, B and C; and on his death, his sons B and C took possession of their father’s estate, and entered into an agreement with their mother, N, to pay her Rs200 per annum for maintenance, and hypothecated some villages as security for due payment. B died and C remained in exclusive possession of the property.

After the death of C, his widows, R and D, and afterwards D alone, took possession of the estate. N sued D for arrears of maintenance accrued since the death of C and obtained a decree. In execution of that decree, she attached the rights and interests of D in certain properties, but she died before any sale took place. The plaintiff, the son of K, then obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 as representative of N. He was appointed a guardian of K, who was, in a suit brought by him before his insanity and before the death of N, declared, by a decree made in 1848, entitled to the estate of C as reversioner. The plaintiff executed the decree obtained by N, and caused the properties, which had been before attached, to be sold in 1866. Some time after D died, and the plaintiff then sued the purchaser to recover possession of the property as the representative of his father under the decree of 1848, but was defeated on the ground set up by the defendants, the purchasers, that his father was no longer heir to C by reason of supervenient insanity when the succession opened out to him on the death of N. The plaintiff then brought this suit to establish his own title to the property as heir of C. It was contended by the defendants, among other things, that by the sale in execution in 1866, under the decree obtained by N against D, the absolute proprietary title passed, and not the life-interest of the widow only. Held that the arrears of maintenance for which the sale in 1866 took place was the personal debt of D, and that nothing but her life-interest passed under the sale. BRIJ BHOOKUN LALL AWUSTEE v. In a suit by the purchaser of the talukhs from the reversioner against the purchasers at the execution sales to recover possession of the talukhs—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. has, for some purposes, only a partial or qualified right, title, and interest in the estate which was her husband's, yet for other purposes she represents an absolute interest therein. The question whether, on the rule of the right, title, and interest of the widow in execution of a decree, the whole interest or inheritance in the family estate does or does not pass, depends on the nature of the suit in which the execution of the decree takes place. If the suit is a personal claim against the widow, then merely the widow's limited estate is sold. If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the family estate, or upon a cause not merely personal against her, then the whole of the inheritance passes by the execution-sale. The judgment which the decree has followed may be examined in order to determine which of these two results attends the execution-sale of the widow's right, title, and interest. The suit was compromised by means of a razinama, one of the terms of which was that the widow should remain in possession of and enjoy the property, but should not alienate it without the brother's permission. Subsequently a personal decree was obtained against the widow, and the land, being sold in execution, was purchased by the defendant in the present suit, in which the first plaintiff was the nephew and reversioner of the deceased husband. Held that the suit against the widow being on a personal claim, only her limited interest in the property was sold in execution, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the property. *Jugul Kishore v. In execution of one of these decrees passed against M, he sold the property in suit belonging to the estate of N, and purchased a moiety of it himself. In a suit on the death of M, by the reversionary heirs of N to recover possession of his share of the property, in which his widow M had only a life-interest, on the allegation that only her life-interest, and not the entire estate, passed,—Held that the suit for contribution brought by J was a suit to recover a debt due by the estate. The amount of the debt in the shape of mesne profits had been decreed against M and others, as representing the estate of N and K, and it was not therefore a personal debt of M. that it is but reasonable to suppose that she will fairly and honestly contest the right and uphold and maintain the several interests which are adverse to those of the plaintiff. So where there is a charge created by the ancestor from whom the widow and the reversioners alike derive their title, there is such identity of interest as will justify the widow being treated as the "substantial representative." not affected by the sale, and praying for redemption. The lower Courts allowed the claim and passed a decree for the plaintiffs. On second appeal, Held (reversing the decree and remanding the case) that the Courts in determining the effect of an execution-sale must look to the substance of the transaction. The question was whether the debt for which the property was sold was a joint family debt, and whether it was the equity of redemption in the entirety of the mortgaged property that was offered for sale, bargained for, and intended to be bought. It was obvious that, if the sons had been parties to the suit in which the decree had been passed, they would have appeared by their mother and guardian, and there was no reason to suppose that anything would have been differently done in the suit if she had been described as their guardian instead of being treated as the representative of the estate. Under these circumstances, the sons were substantially represented in the suit, and the sale and proceedings therein should be treated as valid, unless the sons were able to show either that their father's debt, which was the foundation of the decree, was of such a nature that no liability arising from it could attach to the family property, or, if they failed in that, they might show that the entirety of the family property was, in fact, not sold. *DEVJI v. 117. ———— Effect of re-marriage—Act XV of 1856, ss. 2, 3, 5—Inheritance.—A Hindu died leaving a widow and minor son and daughter. The widow re-married after her husband's estate had vested in her son. The son subsequently died, and his step-brother took possession of the property. The widow then brought a suit against the step-brother for possession. Held that the suit was maintainable, and that she could properly succeed as heir to her son, notwithstanding her second marriage. *AKORA SUTH v. Per JENKINS J (in the Court below)—It is a rule of general application that the Court will not adjudicate so as to bind absent parties though the Courts have under certain circumstances permitted the expectant reversioners to be represented by a Hindu widow entitled to immediate and present interest. The principle upon which a widow is regarded as a "substantial representative" of the inheritance is that she by reason of the common interest is as much concerned to resist the particular claim as those who are not parties, and degraded for it, plaintiff's right to inherit her property in the absence of nearer heirs could not be affected by such degradation. Held also that, though Act XXI of 1850 gives relief against the forfeiture of rights of persons deprived of caste on other grounds besides that of renouncing or being excluded from the Hindu religion, it does not restore to an outcaste all the rights which he, as a casteman, could have civilly enforced; nor does it contemplate the restoration of privileges the granting of which would amount to an interference with the autonomy of caste; nor does it interfere with the forfeiture of such a right, as, e.g., to participate with other members of a caste in the benefits of a religious institution appropriated to the members of the caste, or to participate jointly with fellow-castemen in the benefit of a caste institution; nor can it apply where the question is not as to the rights of a degraded person, but as to who is entitled to the property of a degraded person. Kery Kolitany v. Moneram Kolita, 13 B. L. R., 1, referred to. Held further that, though under the Hindu law a loss of caste by expulsion for specified reasons causes forfeiture of rights, it has never broken the relationship of the person expelled to those who remain within the caste, degradation having merely the effect of rendering the tie of kindred but dormant; and, e.g., the degradation of either spouse does not dissolve the tie of marriage. It is impossible to construct out of the Smritis and commentaries a consistent doctrine of "civil death" or "fiction of death." Prostitution does not sever the legal relation, and therefore the degradation of a woman in consequence of her unchastity does not in law entail a cessation of the tie of kindred between her and the members of her natural family or between her and the members of her husband's family. Nor does a wife's adultery, unattended by degradation, dissolve the marriage. Held therefore that the step-son was entitled to inherit the property as sapinda of the widow's late husband in the absence of nearer heirs. *SUBBARAYA PILLAI v. The doctrine of the alienability, by a co-parcener, of his undivided share, without the consent of his co-sharers, should not be extended, in the above manner, beyond the decided cases. The Bombay Court had ruled that a co-parcener could not, without his co-sharer's consent, either give or devise his share, and that the alienation must be for value. The Madras Court had ruled that, although a co-parcener could alienate his share by gift, that right was itself founded on the right to partition, and died with the co-parcener, of the estate of the deceased. The extent of the widow's right to a proper maintenance. A Hindu by will gave all the movable and immovable property to his family, and, after stating that he had four sons, he directed that his property should never be divided by them, their sons or grandsons, in succession, but that they should enjoy the surplus proof a disagreement between the sons as to family the testator directed that after the expenses attending the estate, the widow and the maintenance of the members of the family, whatever might produce and surplus there might be should be divided equally in certain proportions among the members of the family. At the date of the will the members of the family were joint to the estate, and undivided. The accumulations of the free were divided and received by the will. Held, first, that the bequest to the widow was not an absolute gift, but was to be considered as a gift to the testator's family, and that the gift was in the male line as a joint family, so long as the family remained joint, and that if the members were divided the share of the widow after partition

Held in the same case on appeal to the Privy Council.—It has not been established that the estate of a widow forms an exception to the general rule that the estate of a Hindu once vested by succession or inheritance is not divested by any act or incapacity which before succession would have formed a ground for exclusion from inheritance. The general rule is stated in the Viramitrodaya, Ch. VIII, "On exclusion from inheritance," paras. 3, 4, and 5. This work, like the Mitakshara, may be referred to in Bengal in cases in regard to which the Dayabhaga is silent. A widow who, not having been degraded or deprived of caste, had inherited the estate of her deceased husband, held not liable to forfeit that estate by reason of subsequent acts of unchastity. Quære—As to the effect of her being degraded or deprived of caste for unchastity. *MONIRAM KOLITA v. HINDU LAW—WIDOW—continued.*4. DISQUALIFICATIONS—continued.

One of the sons of the testator died leaving three sons, one of whom also died without issue, leaving a widow. Held further, that the directions contained in the will that the property should go in the male line did not exclude the widow of the grandson of the testator and that the widow was entitled to a third share of a fourth part of the property and accumulations without prejudice to her right as a Hindu widow, when the property could be divided. *SOVATY JISACK v. ## 2. ATTESTATION AND PROOF OF WILLS

D brought her suit to establish her right as widow of C to a moiety of the family property. The representatives of D act up an instrument, which they alleged to be the will of C whereby he bequeathed his share to D, reserving the maintenance to D. The Judge of the Allah Court of Nuddea held that the alleged will of C was genuine, and dismissed D's suit. The High Court, on appeal, held (1) that D brought, firstly, to have shown her title to suit, - i. e., having admitted the family came from Mitakshara, she ought to have shown that they were no longer governed by the Mitakshara law; (2) that for several generations the rule of inheritance had been according to the Dayabhaga; (3) that the alleged will was not proved (there was evidence before the Court of the factum of the will adequate to the proof of an ordinary will, but the Court held that this evidence was outweighed by the internal improbabilities); (4) that if the rule of inheritance was according to the Dayabhaga, the will was invalid. On appeal to the Privy Council, - Held, first, it would be a rash conclusion on the state of the evidence of the fact of the will, and the intention of the testator, to hold that the will was invalid.

for treating the will as a dubious record, it was not necessary to decide whether the rule of inheritance was according to the Day's law or the Mitakshara. Third, the evidence was adequate to the proof of an ordinary will, and there was no internal improbability of the will sufficient to discredit it.

The immoveable property allotted to them remained unapportioned, and was managed, first, by the widow of M till her death in 1855; then by his eldest son K, till his death, without male issue, in 1859; then by the next eldest son V till his death, without issue, in 1864; and afterwards by the elder of the two surviving sons; and the proceeds were treated throughout as though the property was held in co-parcenary by the four sons as a joint and undivided Hindu family. In a suit brought by L, the widow of K, against K’s surviving brothers, and S, the widow of his brother V, in which L claimed to be absolutely entitled as heir of her husband [and also as heir of her daughter, who died after her husband’s death, childless and unmarried] to a fourth part of the third share of the estate allotted by the award of 1855,—Held in the lower Court (1) that the words “share and share alike,” occurring in the will of V, ought not to be construed as necessarily constituting a tenancy-in-common, with all the incidents attached thereto in English law, but that each of the four sons of M took a separate share in the third of the testator’s residuary estate; the share of each son going on his decease to those who would, according to Hindu (and not according to English) law, be his heirs as a separated Hindu; (2) that with regard to the immoveable property devised by the will and allotted by the award to the sons of M, there never was a union of estate, a co-parcenary, from the commencement; and consequently there was no re-union in the sense of the Hindu law, notwithstanding joint enjoyment and common residence; but only postponement for a time, and for purposes of convenience, of an apportionment of the estate, which was accordingly (among other things) decreed. LAKSHMIBAI v. As his views appeared to favour single heirship, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one, and the donee of the power to adopt being one,—Held that accordingly the words “Maharani Sahiba” were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both. Held also that, as if there had been no will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life-estate of the senior, but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, this was an interest bringing her within the meaning of s. 13, para. I of Act I of 1869; so that maintenance bequeathed to her by the will was payable, notwithstanding its not having been registered (as that section required in other cases) as well out of the talukhdari as out of the non-talukhdari estate of the testator. Held also that this had been rightly decreed to her as she had sued upon the will, although her direct claim in her plaint was not for this, but to share the comprised in that clause, as tenants-in-common, and that the ulterior interest, not having been validly disposed of, fell into the residuary estate. On this appeal, with reference to s 82 of "the Indian Succession Act, 1865," made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, by s 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, some doubt was expressed by the Judicial Committee whether in the clause it sufficiently appeared that the estates given to the sons were only estates for life. It was, however, in the view taken of the other clause of which the construction was in dispute, unnecessary to determine that point. In the next clause to be construed there were words which had been held by the appellate High Court to give to each of the two sons of the testator only a life estate in a half share of the residuary estate. Whether those words, which followed a gift to the testator's two sons of the whole residue in equal shares, were so clear that only this restricted interest was intended to be given to them, was considered, in like manner, to be open to doubt in regard to the rule of construction imposed by s 82. But this was also not required to be determined, as this clause, the 13th in the will, was not applicable under the circumstances. It was now determined that the third and last of the disputed clauses, No 18 in the will, clearly gave the residuary estate to the testator's

When the adopted son attains his age, he will become the malik of the whole of my property and will perform the shrad and tarpan of my father and father's father, and in the event of any good or evil befalling the said adopted son, she will again adopt a son . . . and upon the adopted son attaining his age, he will become 'the malik' of the whole of the property." K, who survived the testator, did not adopt, but took possession of the property and remained in possession till she died in 1875, and after her death the testator's children held the property in equal shares, with the exception of a house, which the defendant had taken sole possession of. The plaintiff brought this suit for partition, and for an account of that part of the property which had been in sole possession of the defendant. The defendant contended that her mother took an absolute estate the widow should only take a limited estate, and that the word "malik" as applied to the widow could not therefore be interpreted as giving her a larger interest. PUSCHOMONY DASS v. TROTHUCKO MOHIN DASS.

In the same case it is applied to the Privy Council it was held there are two critical principles in the construction of wills, deeds, and other documents. The first is that clear and unambiguous imperative words are not to be controlled or qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is that technical words, or words of known legal import, must have their legal effect, even though the testator was inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not use the technical terms in their proper sense. Doed, Gallan v. Gallan, 5 B. & Ald., 621, referred to and followed. In a Hindu will an heritable and alienable estate is to be understood by the use of the words "shall become malik," unless the context indicates a different intention. The words putra-poutradi krame have acquired a technical force, and are used as meaning an estate of inheritance. That a testator may have imperfectly understood the words which he has used, or the effects of conferring an hereditary estate, would not justify the giving an interpretation to his words other than their legal meaning. A will contained the following in favour of the testator's

83. ——— Use of words "putra poutradi krame"—Condition subsecut.—In a will, the words "putra poutradi krame," recognized as apt for conveying an estate of inheritance, do not limit the succession to male descendants and will include female heirs of a female, where by law the estate would descend to such heirs. The will of a Hindu, who died, leaving only a widow, a daughter's daughter, and a brother, directed as follows: "7. If no daughter or daughter's son of mine should be living at the time of the death of my wife, then my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) shall become the proprietress of my property, and shall remain in undisputed possession thereof, 'putra poutradi krame.'" contrary to the terms of the will should be deprived of his interest which should, in due course, devolve on the other heirs. It was found on the evidence that forfeiture under cl 4 of the will had been incurred by the defendant B, the younger widow of the testator, by reason of her having broken the condition relating to residence. Held that s. 83 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which enacts that "where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the will that only a restricted interest was intended for him," applied to the case. Held also that the will gave only a restricted interest to the widows, and that cl 2 of the will should be construed as giving to the widows as joint tenants a life interest in a

70. ——— Testamentary bequest contained in wajib-ul-arz—Devise by a Hindu in favour of a female—Presumption as to intention of testator concerning the estate to be taken by the devisee.—One M R, a separated Hindu, died in 1882, leaving him surviving two daughters and a daughter-in-law S, the widow of a pre-deceased son. During his lifetime M R had caused to be recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of two villages, D and A, owned by him—"S, wife of my son S R, shall be regarded as owner after my death." In the wajib-ul-arz of a third village the following entry was recorded—"After my death G, the adopted son, and S, the wife of S R, shall have a right to the property." Subsequently to the death of M R, the nature of the estate taken by S in the villages D and A came before a Court of law, and S did not challenge the decree which was then passed declaring her interest to be only a life-estate. Held that, under the above circumstances, and having regard to the sentiments prevalent amongst Hindus on the subject of the devolution of immoveable property upon females, the devise of the villages D and A must be taken to convey an estate for life only and not the absolute ownership in the villages. Soorjeemoney Dossee v. that "just as I am the owner so she is to be the owner," but there were no words of inheritance used, nor did he directly give his wife any power of disposition over the property. Held that she took only a life-interest in the property. 72. ——— Devise to widow—Widow's estate—Stridhan.—One D, a separated sonless Hindu, made a will in favour of his wife, of which the material clause was as follows:—"After my death the said Musammatt * * * is to be the person in possession and ownership in place of me, the executant, of all the bequeathed property aforesaid by right of this will." D died, leaving a widow and a daughter who was married to one J. The widow obtained possession of the property comprised in the will on the death of D. The daughter died in the lifetime of the widow, who thereupon made a will leaving the property which had come to her from D to J. On the death of the widow, certain persons alleging themselves to be the nearest reversioners to D claimed the property. Held that on the wording of the will and having regard to the surrounding circumstances of the case, the testator having no near male heirs, and the plaintiffs, if reversioners at all, being remote reversioners, the intention of the testator D was to leave the property in question to his widow as her stridhan, to descend to her heirs. Koonjbehari Dhur v. On the question as to what was the nature and extent of the interest to which the testator's widow was entitled thereunder,—Held that, having regard to the rule of construction which has been repeatedly applied to gifts by Hindus in favour of their wives, the intention of the testator was not that his wife should take an absolute estate. The supposition is that a Hindu donor intends to act in accordance with the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus regarding the devolution and enjoyment of property among the members of his family. Though it was competent for the testator to provide for his wife in such a way that she should have absolute control over the property given her, that is not the provision which the Hindu law makes for a widow. The language of the will was not inconsistent with an intention on the part of the testator that the son, with his adoptive mother,

Effect of ikrarnama between widows in favour of sons whose adoption was invalid.—A testator bequeathed all his property to a family thakur, and, to secure the debsheba, directed that his two widows should each adopt a son to him, the sons to become shebait of the property dedicated, of which the widows, during the sons' minority, were to have control. When the two sons should have attained their majority, the two widows were, by the will, to make over to them as shebait all the property dedicated; and out of the surplus income, after payment of the expenses of the debsheba, the two sons were to receive a fixed allowance, the residue being undisposed of. The widows, having purported to adopt according to the will, then bound themselves by an ikrarnama, each to the other, to bring up the sons as their mothers and guardians, and, after payment of the expenses for the debsheba, to divide the surplus income into two equal shares, making accumulations, which should be handed over by each to the son adopted by her on his attaining majority. In a suit by the son purported to have been adopted by the elder widow, who was then dead, against the younger widow, and the son purported to have been adopted by her, in effect for the administration of the testator's estate, with a claim for relief based on acts of the widows, including the ikrarnama executed by them.—Held, first, that it being settled law that such an adoption was not valid, the plaintiff could take nothing under the will, because there was no gift to him except in the character of shebait, there having been no intention on the part of the testator, who apparently had no doubt as to the legality of his scheme to bring in a stranger as shebait. Monemothonauth Day v. Secondly, that by the law of inheritance the widows as heirs took the office of shebait, and became entitled to the beneficial interest in the surplus income for their estates for life, so that each of them could contract to bind her own interest. Thirdly, that there was no trust imposed upon the surviving widow independently of the contract which she had made; but that the ikrarnama, taken as part of the series of acts, gave to the boys, so far as the widows' interests extended, the same benefit that they would have taken had they been heirs; and although they were not, and could not have been at their age, parties to the ikrarnama, yet that they could insist on the performance of the contract, by which each widow bound herself to the other to deal with the estate in their favour. Fourthly, that each boy was entitled on attaining majority to half of the surplus income during the life of the surviving widow, and to the accumulations thereon; and accounts were accordingly directed against her. This widow, however, having died pending the appeal, after it had been argued, the testator's heir was added to the record, it resting with the plaintiff to apply to the Court below to add necessary parties. SURENDRO KESHUB ROY v. After the testator's death, the widow, as in exercise of the power conferred on her by the will, purported to adopt a boy who did not come within the description in the first of the above clauses, although one of the testator's brothers offered his own son in adoption. In a suit by the testator's brothers for a declaration that the adoption purported to have been made by the widow was invalid.—Held that, notwithstanding the general terms of the second of the above clauses, the widow's power to adopt was restricted by the first, and the adoption purported to have been made by her was invalid. AMIRTHAYAN v. 105. ————— Charitable gifts

—Void gifts—Gifts void for uncertainty.—A testator by his will directed that his executors should "get a Shiva's temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the brick-built baitakhana-house inclusive of the building and garden thereto," in which he had constantly resided. Held that the direction was not void for uncertainty, and that under the circumstances 3 per cent. of the testator's moveable estate was a proper sum to allow for the cost of erecting the temple. Held also that a direction to the executors to "perform all the acts properly and bona fide, to the best of their respective information and judgment, and according to the provisions of this will," did not give the trustees an absolute discretion to fix the amount proper to be expended on the erection of the temple. The testator further declared that "the said executors or any of" his "heirs and representatives" should "not be able to make any kind of gift, sale, or alienation, or create any incumbrance on the" said baitakhana-house, "and none of" his "heirs" should "be able to claim it in his own right; but that the "executors" should "be competent to allow" the testator's "brother, I L R, and his sister's son, S D R, to use the said baitakhana and rooms, etc." Held that this clause did not operate to dedicate the baitakhana-house to the idol Shiva, nor to vest it in the executors, but that on the death of the testator it descended to his heir-at-law, freed from any prohibition against alienation. The testator further directed that his executors should "keep in deposit Government Promissory Notes of *R*9,500 (nine and half thousand rupees) for the preservation and suitable repairs of" the baitakhana "house in proper time, and for the daily and periodical worship of the said god Shiva, for his sheba (worship) and for the repairs of the temple," the expenses of these acts to be defrayed out of interest of the *R*9,500. Held that (there having been no dedication of the baitakhana-house to the idol) the sum of *R*9,500 must be apportioned, one moiety going to the heir-

at-law, to whom the baitakhana-house had descended and the other to the executors for the repairs of the temple and the worship of the idol. The testator further declared that, "if after the performance of all the above acts there remains any money of moveable property as surplus, then the executor shall be able to spend the same in proper and just acts for the testator's benefit." Held that the direction contained in this clause was void for uncertainty. Held also that such direction did not amount to a valid precatory trust. Mussoorie Bank v. —Sadavarat—Well—Cistern—Preference given to unmarried daughters over married daughter.—M, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, died in 1886, leaving him surviving his widow, and three daughters, one married and two unmarried. The testator's will contained the following provisions: Cl. 6. "Should my wife die without leaving an heir, then as to whatever property of mine there may be left, the same be used as follows:—My trustees shall make the outlay for both the sadavarats and that for the work of repair of my property, out of my fund. And as to whatever surplus may remain out of the same, let my trustees pay to my brother D M's son, named B R, *R*50 per one month for his expenses. As to the surplus moneys which may remain out of the same after taking B R's advice are to be used in making the outlays for building a well and avada (i.e., cistern of water for animals to drink out of). Such moneys are truly to be used by my trustees. 10. In my country, at the village of Shri Anjar, I am at present carrying on a sadavarat. Similarly, out of my fund my trustees are always to continue (the same), and if there be heirs of mine, those also are to continue the same. The sadavarat shall never be stopped. 16. After my death, my trustees shall out of my income set up a sadavarat in the town of Shri Nassik. In that sidho (articles of food) are to be given to each person as follows: Flour weighing sixty rupees. Dal (pulse) weighing eight rupees. Salt and chillies. 18. A sadavarat of mine is now going on in the village of Shri Anjar, and I have written for another sadavarat to be set up at Shri Nassik. Thus my trustees are to carry on both the sadavarats in a good manner. And they are to pay the expenses thereof out of my funds. And when my trustees shall make over my property to any of my abovementioned heirs, or to any one who may hereafter be appointed as heir, in order that the expenses of both the sadavarats may be properly defrayed out of the interest (or rents), a sum of money sufficient for that or houses, whichever my trustees may choose, i.e. property sufficient to maintain the expenses of both the sadavarats, shall be set

that the grandsons during the lifetime of their fathers took nothing, but after the death of their father respectively took among them equally their father's share, the share of each son going to his own son or sons only, and not to grandsons of the testator generally. The restriction on alienation extended to both the moveable and immoveable property. Held also that the widow of T, having received a sum of money from M and G in lieu of T's share, that share went to M and G in equal shares for life, and on the death of either of them his share would go to his own sons absolutely. SATCOWRIE SINGH v. After payment of debts, legacies, etc., G and S were directed to manage the residue of estate and not to sell it during the lifetime of L, the junior wife of V S, to whom a monthly payment for life was to be made by them, after the death of L, G and S were directed to divide the property that remained in equal shares between them and to continue to enjoy the same. S, wife of V S, to the death of L, declared and for an account—that there was no intestacy, and that the gift to G and S did not fail by reason of their deaths in the lifetime of L, but that G and S took a vested interest on the death of V S. KOLLA SUBRAMAMAIN CHETTI v. 112. Inability of widow to recover property not in possession of husband.—A Hindu testator, after the death of his widow, gave a moiety of his property to his brother A, and on his death to A's two sons, B and C. A died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, and a complete division of all A's property which was held in co-parcenary was agreed upon by B and C. B also died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, and on the death of the testator's widow B's widow claimed his share. Held that B and C took A's moiety under the will as tenants-in-common, and that each of them had a vested interest in a one-fourth share, though the actual enjoyment was postponed until the death of the widow; and that the claim of B's widow was not barred by the doctrine of Hindu law that a widow succeeding as heir to her husband cannot recover property not in the possession of her husband, which doctrine was held to be inapplicable to the case of property in which the husband had a vested interest under a will or deed, though the actual enjoyment thereof was postponed during the lifetime of another. *REWUN PERSAD v. 113. Joint tenancy—Tenancy-in-common—"Heirs of my property," effect of these words in Hindu will.—B died in 1876, leaving H, his widow, and N, an adopted son, him surviving; and he directed by his will that H and N should be the heirs of his property. N died childless in 1880, leaving the plaintiff, L his widow, him surviving. H thereupon took possession of all B's property claiming as a joint tenant with N under the will to be entitled by survivorship on N's death. Held that, under the will, H and N had been tenants-in-common, and not joint tenants; and that the plaintiff, therefore, as N's widow was entitled to N's share. In the expounding of Hindu wills the Court should presume that the holder did not intend to depart from the general law beyond what he explicitly declares. B, while he had constituted his widow H as one of his heirs contrary to the general principles of Hindu law, which only gave her a right to maintenance, was silent as to how far her right of heirship was to extend. The right was to be construed in a manner most consistent with the general principles of Hindu law; and to hold that a joint tenancy had been created between H and N would be in distinct derogation of the joint family system, which is the keystone of Hindu law. It would be in effect to exclude the son's family, for the benefit of the widow, in total disregard of the relations and obligations of a Hindu family. The fact of N dying childless was an accident which could not be presumed to have been in the testator's contemplation. LAKSHMIBAI v. HIRABAI

Held in the same case on appeal, affirming the decree of the lower Court, that under the will H took only a widow's estate in half the property, and that (subject to her right as a Hindu widow to a widow's estate in a half share) the entire property vested absolutely in N. On N's death, the property (subject as aforesaid) vested in the plaintiff L as his widow and heir for a widow's estate, and she became entitled to joint possession with the defendant H. A widow taking under her husband's will takes only a widow's estate in the property bequeathed to her, unless the will contains express words giving her a larger estate. HIRABAI v. LAKSHMIBAI

114. Joint tenancy—Gift to husband and wife—Survivorship—Alienation by husband to creditor invalid.—A Hindu by his will granted jointly to his brother's son and N, the wife of latter, certain land with power of alienation. The recitals in the will showed that the husband was included in the gift not because of his relationship to the testator, but because he was the husband of N. Held that the grantees were joint tenants and not tenants-in-common, and that the joint tenancy was not severed by an alienation of the land by the husband to a creditor. *VYDINADA v. By the deed of gift he gave his property as follows: To his three sons, G, T, and M, his self-acquired estate and his patrimony, i.e., his own share, agreeably to the will of his father, giving to them power of making a gift or sale, and to hold and enjoy themselves, sons, grandsons and so on in succession. mainders—Executory devise—There is nothing in the general principles of Hindu law, or public convenience, to prevent a Hindu testator devising self-acquired property by way of remainder, or executory devise, upon an event which is to happen on the close of a life in being. The will of a Hindu testator, after devising all his real and personal estate among his five sons (a joint undivided family) contained this clause: "Should any among my said five sons die, not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's sons, in that event neither his widow, nor his daughter, nor his daughter's son, nor any of them will get any share out of the share that he has obtained of the immovables, and moveables of my said estate. In that event, of the said property, such of my sons and my sons' sons as shall then be alive, they will receive that wealth according to their respective shares. If any one acts repugnant to this it is inadmissible. However, if any sonless son shall leave a widow, in that event she will only receive Rs 10,000 for her food and raiment." The family remained joint. S, one of the sons, died after the testator's death without issue male, but leaving a widow his heiress at law. Held that, by the words "not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's son," the testator meant not an indefinite

B and M both died in the lifetime of C's two widows. M died first, childless and unmarried. B left a widow him surviving, who claimed that under cl. 2 B took a vested estate in the testator's share in the two houses, which on his death devolved upon her, and that under cl. 16 B and M took a vested estate in joint tenancy; that on M's death his interest survived to B, and on his death devolved upon his widow. It was contended on behalf of the two widows of C, the testator, that the gift to B by cl. 2 and to B and M by cl. 16 was contingent, and had lapsed by their deaths; that the result was an intestacy so far as regards the property in question; that they consequently took a widow's estate in the immoveable property for their lives; and that upon their death the property should go to the testator's daughter J; and that, as to the moveables, they took absolutely. Held that under cl. 2 B took on the death of the testator not a contingent, but a vested estate in perpetuity, which on his death devolved on his widow; and that under cl. 16 B and M took a vested interest in joint tenancy in the whole of the residuary estate; that on the death of M, the survivor B took the whole absolutely, and on his death his interest was transmitted to his widow. Held also that the interest taken by B under the above clauses of the will was subject to the right of the testator's widows to reside in the houses, and to have their monthly allowances paid out of the moveable estate, and was subject also to the bequests, charitable and otherwise, contained in the will. By cls. 15 and 16 of his will the testator directed that certain monthly allowances should be paid to each of his widows out of the interest of certain Government promissory loan notes which were to be purchased by his trustees. Held that, if the particular sources of income, out of which the testator directed these allowances to be paid, should prove insufficient, the rest of the moveable property, or the income derivable from it, as well as the rents of the immoveable property, should contribute. The funds belonging to the testator's estate had, in accordance with the directions in his will, been kept in the firm of Visram Mowji, in which the testator had been a partner. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the firm should be charged interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. JAIRAM NARBONJI v. The will was proved by the four executors on 24th September 1808. 1862, R sold the house for its full value to the defendant, who had notice of the charitable trust affecting it. R died on 23rd March 1870. On 17th March 1871, the High Court, on the application of one A T, revoked the probate of B K's will granted to R, but without prejudice to any act done in due course of administration by R, and granted letters of administration cum testamento annexo and de bonis non of B K to A T. On 13th July 1873 A T died. On 1st May 1875 the plaintiff, who was the only son and heir of A T, instituted the present suit for the purpose of recovering from the defendant possession of the trust premises sold to him by R. The plaintiff was also one of the surviving heirs of B K, and, by virtue of a release executed to him by the other heirs, was the sole surviving heir who had any beneficial interest in B K's estate. The plaintiff, however, did not claim the house in the possession of the defendant as the beneficial owner, but to hold it for the purpose of giving effect to the trust created by the will of B K. On 28th January 1876 the plaintiff obtained letters of administration cum testamento annexo and de bonis non of B K, and it was on these letters that he now based his claim. Held, 1st, that the plaintiff had no ground of action as administrator of B K. Held, 2ndly, that independently of the provisions of the Succession Act and the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, which were not applicable to the case, the executors of a Hindu do not, in the character merely of executors, take any estate, properly so called, in the property of the deceased. That accordingly on the death of R, the devisee for life in trust, there being no gift of the premises to the executors named in the will, the ownership in the premises would devolve upon the surviving heirs of the testator subject to the trust, and such heirs would accordingly be trustees under or by reason of the will of their ancestor, though succeeding to the property in their character of heirs. That the trusteeship thus vesting in all the surviving heirs, the release, though operative to pass the legal estate, so as to vest it in the plaintiff alone, could not vest the trusteeship in him alone, and that accordingly the plaintiff could not maintain this suit unless joined by the other heirs of B K. Held, 3rdly, that even if the other heirs of B K had joined as plaintiff, still the suit, being one by trustees to disaffirm the completed act of a predecessor against the person claiming by virtue of such act, would not lie. Semble—That as it appeared that the impersonations of Valabh never had availed themselves, and never were likely to avail themselves, of the house, the sale of it by R to the defendant was not a breach of trust. MANIKLAL ATMARAM v. failure of male issue, but a failure of male issue of any one of his sons at the time of the death of that son. Held, further, (1) that upon the death of S without male issue, his interest in the capital of the estate determined, and that his widow became entitled to hold and enjoy as a Hindu widow a fifth part of the accumulations from the testator's estate from the time of his death to the death of his son S; and (2) that she was also entitled absolutely in her own right to the interest and accumulations which had since S's death arisen from such fifth part of the accumulations. By the decree S's widow was declared entitled to the Rs10,000 given by the will with the benefit of a residence in the family dwelling-house, and participations in the means of worship. The question of the amount of her maintenance as a Hindu widow was left open by the Judicial Committee, as that point could be raised on further directions after taking the accounts. SOORJEE-MONEY DOSSEE v. 126. ——— Perpetuities—Trusts—Absence of disposition of beneficiary interest.—A Hindu by will attempted to create a trust for the accumulation for 99 years of the surplus income (after certain yearly payments) of his estate in the purchase of zamindaris, etc., from time to time, and empowered his trustees to continue such trust after the expiration of the 99 years' term. The will contained no disposition of the beneficial interest in the zamindaris so to be purchased. Held that such trust was void. Seemle—Perpetuity (save in the case of religious and charitable endowments) is not sanctioned by Hindu law. ASIMA KRISHNA DEB v. 127. ——— Trusts.—A Hindu by his will left all his property "in full and absolute right, property, and ownership" (nevertheless upon the conditions and trusts, and with the intent and for the purposes thereafter described), to certain persons named, and "to their successors in the trusts of the settlement thereafter provided," declaring the "trusts and objects" of his said will and settlement, and the methods, plans, and acts" he desired "to be performed and observed" by such persons and their successors in the trusts. He then desired that all his property should be preserved and held for ever under the trusts, and for the purposes of the said will and settlement. In the second, third, and fourth clauses of the will, the testator went on to direct the "executors and trustees" to pay to his sons therein named a certain monthly sum, "such payment to be continued after his decease to his children and descendants per stirpes." After directing the executors and trustees to make other payments, etc., in the eighteenth clause he directed: "With respect to accumulations of money in the hands of the executors and trustees, I direct that the same be converted into such Government or other security as to the executors and trustees may seem best, and that the interest and produce of such security be accumulated and in like manner be invested, and that, when and so soon as the aggregate thereof shall amount to Rs3,00,000, it is to be transferred to, and divided among, my sons or the survivors, or survivor, together with the descendants of such of them as may be deceased, per stirpes; and as soon as new accumulations arise in the hands of the executors and trustees, that the same be again in like manner divided among my sons then living, or the survivor of their descendants, as before, and so on from time to time." In the twenty-first clause the testator made provision for the appointment of new "executors and trustees," "as it is my intent and desire that the disposition, the conditions, and control I am now devising in regard to the future arrangement and enjoyment of my property be perpetuated." In the Court below,—Held per MARBY, J., that trusts cannot be created by Hindus, but a testator may burthen his heir or devisee with a payment of a simple sum of money to a specified person (including an idol) in existence at the death of the testator. Such bequest cannot be held good as a trust created for the benefit of the legatee, but may be treated as creating an ordinary obligation for the payment of money. On appeal,—Held per PEACOCK, C.J., that trusts have been and can be enforced against Hindus; the trustees in this case take upon such trusts as are valid; so far as they are invalid, the heirs are entitled to the beneficial interest. A Hindu cannot by his will do indirectly by intervention of trusts what he cannot do directly. Per MACPHERSON, J.—Both by Hindu law and the practice which has always prevailed in the Courts in India and in the Privy Council, a Hindu may legally deal with his property so as to create a trust or relation in many respects similar to, although not necessarily identical with, that known in English law as the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. Even if trusts are not expressly recognized by the old Hindu law, there is nothing in it forbidding them, or repugnant to them, or inconsistent with their existence. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the general scheme of the will failed, because the trusts were intended for an illegal purpose, namely, for the purpose of creating a perpetuity. Per PEACOCK, C.J.—The eighteenth clause is repugnant and void, also bad, because the persons to take were unborn at the time of the testator's death, and on the ground of uncertainty, it being impossible to ascertain at the testator's death who would be entitled to participate in the several divisions of accumulation directed to be made. As to the bequests in the second, third, and fourth clauses of the will,—Held in the Court below per MARBY, J., that they could only operate in favour of specified persons in existence at the death of the testator. On appeal,—Held per PEACOCK, C.J., that they operated as "gifts to the sons for life, with remainders to such children of the sons as were in existence at the time of the death of the testator per stirpes." Per MACPHERSON, J.—There was a good gift in remainder to the children of such sons as were alive at the time of

He also charged the executors with waste and asked for an account. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the devises were not void, merely upon the ground that the estates were devised upon trust, and that the testator had power to create by means of a devise to trustees such estates and beneficial interest as he could have created without the intervention of trustees. But the entails intended to be created by the will were void, estates-tail being wholly opposed to the general principles of Hindu law. The plaintiff could not claim maintenance, sufficient provision having been previously made for him by his father. Held in the Court below that, although the testator could not create an estate-tail, yet as it is clear that he intended to dispose of the whole inheritance, the devise must be construed as amounting to the creation of several successive life-interests, each commencing on the termination or the failure of the preceding, the whole completed by the gift of the entire estate of inheritance to take effect on the expiration of the last life-interest. The first series of such devises is not bad for remoteness, for there is nothing in Hindu law to prevent a testator from making a gift of property to an unborn person, provided the gift is limited to take effect, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being; therefore, as concerns only the succession of gifts for life only to J M and his sons, terminated by the absolute gift of the inheritance to an unborn person, the will is unimpeachable, because each of these gifts must take effect, if at all, at or before the close of a life in being; and the like conclusion would hold with regard to each of the other series of devises taken alone; but taken in the aggregate they may violate the rule against perpetuities; but the first series could not be affected by this, and therefore, as long as it stands, the plaintiff has no claim to a decision of the Court upon the validity of a devise which is subsequent in order of time. The plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. He is not entitled to immediate relief of any kind. Held on appeal that the devise to J M was valid, though it created only a life-estate. The intention of the testator was that J M should take an immediate vested beneficial interest in the real estate, subject to the charges for payment of legacies, annuities, etc., and in the Rs. 500 a month. The devise to J M was not bad for uncertainty. But the devises of estates-tail must be rejected as void, and cannot be converted by the Court into devises creating larger estates than the testator intended. The words of the devise cannot be construed to pass a general and absolute estate. As J M had no sons born in the lifetime of the testator, the devise to the use of the first and other sons successively of the eldest son of J M lapsed. By Hindu law a gift cannot operate to pass property unless the donee is in existence, so that, as soon as the property is relinquished and passes out of the donor, it may vest in the donee. That in the case of a will would be at the time of the death of the testator, from which moment the will operates as a relinquishment (except in the case of a posthumous child of the testator or a son adopted by the widow of a testator). Therefore the devises to the sons of J M to be born or adopted after the death of the testator are not valid according to Hindu law. The gift to trustees does not cure the invalidity, for the law will not permit that to be done indirectly which cannot be lawfully done directly. The gift of the personalty fails because of the want of certainty at the time of the death of the testator, who would be the donee, and whether the donee was a person in existence or not. The gift over of the corpus of the personalty after the payment of the legacies and annuities was bad, and consequently the property in it is vested in the son and heir of the testator subsequently to the trusts for the payment of debts, legacies, and annuities, etc. But the right to receive the surplus rents and profits of the real estate and of the interest and dividends of the personalty, if there be any, is vested in J M for life, or until the time arrives for the conveying of the real estates, and the vesting of the corpus of the personalty. The heir-at-law cannot be disinherited by words expressing that he is not to take any benefit under the will. He will take by descent, by his right of inheritance, whatever is not validly disposed of by the will. Subject to the trusts for payment of the funeral and testamentary expenses and of the debts, legacies, and annuities, the plaintiff, as the heir-at-law of the testator, is entitled (notwithstanding the will) to a general estate of inheritance in reversion to the immoveable property of the testator, and by the terms of the will no estate, larger than an estate for life, has been validly created, and there is a resulting trust in the plaintiff's favour. The plaintiff is not entitled to a declaratory decree against the unborn sons of J M, or the subsequent unborn devisees. The plaintiff is entitled to have the question of waste tried. He is also entitled to have an account of the moneys and securities which have come into the hands of the trustees, and to see how they have been applied. GANENDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. The plaintiffs filed this suit, praying for possession of the rooms, and for a declaration that they and their families were entitled to reside there. The defendants contended (1) that there was no gift to S's children independently of N. (2) that if there was a gift to the children, it was void, as being a gift to a class some members of which might have come into existence after the testator's death. Held that the clause in the will should be construed as giving the right to live in the house to S and the children after N's death. The benefit was intended to be conferred not only on N, but also on his wife and children, that this was not a devise to a class in the sense in which that expression was used in Leake v Robinson, 2 Mer, 363, viz., a gift to a body of persons uncertain in number at the time of the gift to be ascertained at a future time, the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number of persons. The benefit which each member of the class was to take was in no way dependent on the number of the children, each had a distinct and independent right to reside in the house, and the number of persons who might ultimately belong to the class was in no sense regarded as a criterion of the interest which each was to take. Quare—Whether Soudaminy Dossee v Jogesh Chunder Dutt, 1 L. moveable and immoveable, not otherwise disposed of to J, his executors, administrators and assigns, upon trust to collect outstanding and to pay debts and legacies and to stand possessed of the residue in trust (1) for his (the testator's) wife B and A the wife of his brother J during the life of both, or the survivor of them, for their or her sole use, (2) and from and after decease of the survivor of them in trust for the male issue of J if any there be, (3) and in default of such male issue in trust for any person or persons in any shares or share, and in such manner as his brother J should by any deed or deeds or writing or writings appoint with or without power of revocation or new appointment. J proved the will and as executor managed the estate until his death on the 17th October 1888. He had no male issue, but he had two daughters who were the defendants in this suit. Shortly before his death, viz., on the 7th October 1888, he made a will (as stated therein) in accordance with the authority given to him by the last clause of the will of M P. He directed that twelve months after the death of B (M P's widow), the estate should be divided equally between his two daughters, K and M. K was born in M P's lifetime, but M not until after his death. Held that the trust in M P's will in favour of the male issue of J was void under the rule laid down in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R. 877 L. R., 1 I. A., Sup. Vol. 47. The testator plainly meant that the male issue of J living at the death of the survivor of the tenants for life should take the estate according to the rules of Hindu law, without distinguishing between those born in the lifetime of the testator and those born prior to that event, but subsequently to his death. At the death of the testator, J had no male issue, and the bequest was therefore a bequest to a person or persons not in being and void. Held also, regarding the subsequent creation of the power in favour of J as equivalent to a gift of the estate to him, that such gift was valid, although the prior gift was void. It was a gift to him if he should have no male issue, a gift which, as he was alive at the death of the testator, was good under Hindu law. It was not a gift over to him on an indefinite failure of his male issue. It came into force immediately on the death of the surviving tenant for life if at that time he should have had no male issue alive between the death of the testator and the latter event. If a son had been born to him after the testator's death, the gift to him could not have come into operation. It was only in the event of no son being born to him that he could take. It would not therefore make any difference that the testator made an ineffectual and inoperative disposition in favour of such son if born. The rule of the Tagore case, that the gift of an estate to take effect after the failure of previously created invalid estates was void, did not apply. Held, further, that the power of appointment given by M P's will operated to confer ownership upon J after the death of B upon his death, he further directed that certain lands should be held by his executors on trust, to apply the rents and profits (1) in the celebration of certain poojas and in the performance of periodical turns of worship of the family thakoors and other religious festivals, at the same expense and in the same style as the testator himself had done, or at such expense and in such style as the executors should think fit; and (2) in the maintenance out of the surplus of the five younger sons, their wives, sons, and male descendants, and female descendants until their marriage. Held that the bequests to the children of the daughter and to the children of H were void. CHUNDER MONEE DASSEE v. MOTILALL MULLICK [5 C. L. R., 496]

131. Remoteness—Applicability of English rules to Hindu wills.—A Hindu testator died in 1837, leaving four sons and two grandsons by a deceased son. By his will, dated in 1837, after directing that his property should be divided into five shares, of which his four sons were to take one each, and his two grandsons the remaining one, the testator made the following devise: "On the death of any or either of my said four sons, or of the said R D and M D (his grandsons) leaving lawful male issue, such male issue shall succeed to the capital or principal of the share, or respective shares, of his or their deceased father or fathers, to be paid or transferred to them respectively on attaining the full age of 21 years; but if any or either of my said four sons shall die without leaving any male issue, or if he or they shall die leaving such male issue, and the whole of such issue shall afterwards die under the age of 21 years, and without male issue, in such case the share or shares of my said sons so dying shall go to and belong to the survivors of my said sons and my said two grandsons for life and their respective male issue absolutely after their deaths in the same manner and proportion as is hereinbefore described respecting their original shares." U, one of the sons, died in 1853, leaving an only son S, born in the lifetime of the testator, who died shortly after his father intestate, and without male issue. In a suit by the widow of S claiming as his heir and representative to recover the share of U as having descended to S absolutely, and to obtain partition,—Held that, inasmuch as U survived the testator, the gift to the male issue of the testator's sons was void for remoteness as including objects who might have come into existence after the testator's death, and therefore be incapable of taking. The rule that where there is a gift to a class, and some persons constituting that class cannot take in consequence of remoteness, the whole bequest must fail, as well as the principle of the English Courts in deciding questions of remoteness, that regard is to be had to possible and not to actual events, is applicable to the interpretation of the wills of Hindus. The gift to the male issue being void, the subsequent limitations were also void. S therefore, and through him the plaintiff, was entitled to a share in such part of the testator's estate as by reason of

By his will P left the residue of his property to trustees, who were to invest it in Government promissory notes and to pay the interest thereof to the wife of his son M and after her death to pay it to M. He further directed that after M's death "the amount of the interest is to be paid from time to time to his sons or daughters who may be alive according to what may be considered proper." By a subsequent clause he directed that, if there should be no one living of his son M's race or descent, the said Government notes should be given to a certain charitable fund. At the time of the testator's death the wife and one daughter (C) of M were living. Subsequently a son was born to M, but this child died shortly after its birth. The wife of M died in September 1889, and M himself died in October 1889. The plaintiff then filed this suit claiming the property in question as heir of the testator to the exclusion of C, the daughter of M. He contended that she could only claim as one of the class of "sons or daughters" of M mentioned in the will; that the gift to this class was void, as it included, or might include, persons who were not in existence at the time of the testator's death. Held that C was entitled to the property under the will. The primary intention of the testator was that all the members of the class specified should take and his secondary intention was that, if all could not take, those who could should do so. Here there was one member of the class who could take the property, and it might be inferred that the testator meant that she should take it, rather than that his intention should be defeated altogether. *MANGALDAS PARMANANDAS v. his executing his will, and that the bequests given by his will to his daughters, the defendants, were valid bequests. Held on appeal that the devise in M P's will in favour of the male issue of J meant in favour of such male issue as should be living at the time of the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, whether born in the lifetime of the testator or after his death; and as, at the death of the testator, J had no male issue, it was a gift to a person or persons not in being at that time, and therefore void under the rule in the Tagore case. Held also that the devise over, in default of such male issue, was an alternative gift to take effect on an event to be determined at the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, and consequently was not open to objection. Held further—as to the bequest to such person or persons as J should, by deed or writing, appoint—that there was no clear principle of Hindu law which forbade such a bequest being construed, and effect given to it, according to its plain and literal terms; always subject, however, to the same restrictions as the Hindu testamentary law imposes on the testator himself, viz., that the appointment should be made, so that (i) the appointee might be ascertained when the event arose on which he was to take (in this case, therefore, before the death of the surviving tenants for life), and (ii) the appointee be a person who was alive at the death of the testator. Held, accordingly, that in making this bequest the testator's intention was clearly to give J the ultimate disposal of the property, but not that it should form part of J's estate. The circumstance that English Courts, in such cases, treat the property, when the power has been exercised, as part of the estate of the appointor in the interest of creditors, and some other persons favoured by the Court of equity, could not affect the question as to what was the intention of M P when he made his will. Original Court's decree varied accordingly; the share in the residue appointed by J to his daughter M (born after the testator's death) being declared to be part of M P's estate of which he died intestate, and to belong, therefore, to his (M P's) heir. JAVERBAI v. 136. ————— One member of such class in existence of date of gift—Will directing deed to be executed—Date of deed is date of gift.—A Hindu died in 1856 leaving a will whereby he directed his widow and executrix L to purchase an estate worth R20,000 for his grandson T, and that this estate should be conveyed to trustees, to be held by them in trust for T for his life or until his insolvency, and after his death for his son or other male heir. The executrix purchased the estate, but no trust deed was executed. T therefore brought a suit in 1871 to have the will carried out and a trust deed executed. T R (one of the plaintiffs in the present suit), who was T's uncle, was made a party to that suit and a consent decree was passed which ordered in suit the executrix L and T R should execute a trust deed in accordance with the directions in the will. A deed was accordingly executed in 1876 whereby the property was conveyed to trustees on the trusts declared in the will. At the time of the testator's death, T had no sons, but at the date of the deed in 1876 he had one son C and in 1883 another son G (the defendant) was born to him. T died in 1890, C died childless in 1891. The plaintiffs, who were T R, the son, and T R's son, the grandson, of the testator, now claimed the property. They contended that, as neither of T's sons were in existence at the date of the testator's death, they could not take under his will or under the deed which was afterwards executed to carry out the will; that, although at the date of the deed in 1876 one of the sons (C) was in existence, nevertheless he could only claim as one of a class, and that class was not ascertained or ascertainable at the date of the testator's death, nor at the date of the deed, G not having been born until 1883. The whole class was therefore excluded and the property after T's death was undisposed of. Held that, in view of the direction of the will that a deed was to be executed which should declare the trusts of the property, it was the date of the deed subsequently executed which should be regarded in order to determine the validity of the limitations of the property bequeathed, and not the date of the testator's death, and that, under the deed, on the death of T, his son C became entitled to the property. In the case of a gift to a class if there is a person in existence at the time of the gift capable of taking and whom undoubtedly the donor intends to benefit, he is entitled to take, although others of the same class subsequently come into existence whom the donor meant the gift also to benefit, but who cannot take because of their non-existence at the date of the gift. TRIBHUVANDAS RUTTONJI v. 137. ————— Bequest to "children"—Meaning of the expression "children"—Gift to a class—Gift of income as required with trust for accumulation of balance.—Considerations which only show that a testator has made a disposition in his will which the Court is surprised to find there, though they might have determined the sense in which the testator had used an ambiguous expression, cannot of themselves lead the Court to refuse to give effect to the plain language he has employed, e.g., to read a bequest to "children" as a bequest to "sons" only. A bequest to "the children of R living at his decease," where some such children are in existence at the date of the will, need not be construed as a gift to a class of which some members might come into existence after the testator's death, when such a construction would manifestly defeat the primary object of the testator. A direction in a will to trustees to pay to a Hindu lady so much of certain dividends as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, etc., and to accumulate the surplus not required by her upon trusts, entitles the legatee to receive, if she requires it, the whole interest as it falls due, but not to claim afterwards amounts which she did not require as they fell due, and which have been accumulated, and this is so whether the

not only that a gift to a person unborn is invalid, but that an attempt to establish a new rule of inheritance is invalid. A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his executors upon trust to pay the income to his daughter during her lifetime, and after her death in trust to convey the residue to his two half-brothers, in equal moieties, and to the heir or heirs male of them or either of their bodies, on failure of whom upon trust to give the same to the sons or son of his daughter. Both the half-brothers survived the testator. On the death of one of them, the daughter (so whom children, as well as to the half brothers, had been born), making all persons interested parties, claimed that the trust and limitations had become void as to one moiety of the residue bequeathed, and that she had become the gift of the residue, so far as it purported to confer an estate of inheritance on the half brothers and the heirs male of their bodies, was contrary to law and void, that the gift to the plaintiff's sons, unborn at the death of the testator, was incapable of taking effect, that each of the half brothers took an estate for life in one moiety of the residue bequeathed, in remainder expectant on the death of the plaintiff, and that accordingly, on the death of the half brother, who had died before this suit was brought, the inheritance of his moiety had devolved on the plaintiff, as daughter and heir of her father, and as she claimed KRISTOROMONI DASI v.

grandson by a daughter should get nothing, but his share should go over to the surviving sons. The testator finally directed that his eldest son, son's grandsons, and other heirs in succession, should perform the duties of kurta and shebait. In a suit by the widow of one of the testator's sons by his third wife, seeking to recover such a share of the testator's property as she would have been entitled to in case of intestacy,—Held that the intention of the testator in disposing of the profits of the six annas share was not an intention to create a valid estate in the corpus in favour of any individual, but to tie up such corpus and to give the profits only to his male descendants; or, in other words, to create a sort of estate in tail male in the profits, and that the bequest was void. Held also that the disposition of the ten annas share of the profits was void, there being in one event a direction to accumulate for ever without a disposition of the profits; and in the other event, the gift was void for the same reasons as the gift of the six annas share. Held, further, that the disposition of the family dwelling-house, save in so far as it prohibited alienation, was good, and that there was a sufficient disposition of the moveable property. SHOOKMOY CHUNDER DAS v. Held on appeal by the Privy Council, affirming this decision, that the Hindu law does not allow such a disposition of property as would have been made by a testator whose intention was to give to his descendants the profits only of his estate for their benefit, and for the maintenance of religious services, but not to dispose of the estate itself. Held that, according to the true construction of the will taken altogether, the testator's intention was not to pass the estate. This was confirmed by the clauses against alienation, and for the accumulation, as long as the family should remain joint, of a certain share of the profits; another portion being assigned for the religious services. This was not a case in which a testator, having expressed an intention that his estate should pass, had added a clause against alienation, in which case the latter clause would have been merely void. Held, accordingly, that this bequest was invalid. An account of the profits of the estate, from the date of the death of the testator, having been ordered by the decree of the Court below in favour of the inheritor of a share at whose instance the bequest was held invalid,—Held that this did not mean that enquiry should be made into the different payments by the manager for the time being, or moneys taken out by the members of the family, but that it should be ascertained to what portion of the savings of the family, or of the accumulations made, such sharer would be entitled; and that this order was accordingly correct. SHOOKMOY CHUNDER DAS v. (Similar trusts in favour of L and her children followed.) The residue of the income of the moveable estate was directed to be paid, by moieties to the widows, and on the death of each, her share was to be given to her issue in the same way as the other sums were directed to be paid to them respectively. Held that the recital as to the testator's desire to establish a perpetuity did not invalidate the subsequent trusts, so far as they were otherwise good according to law; that the trust for the repair of the house was valid during the lives of the two widows and the survivor of them; that the trust to allow the two widows and their families to occupy the family dwelling-house was a trust for the widows and no one else, empowering them with their families and any others whom they might choose to make members of their families to reside in the house; that the trust to allow the testator's children, and their heirs on death of the widow, to occupy the house, was void; that the wives were entitled to Rs 5 monthly, and the children of each, during the lives of their respective mothers, to Rs 5, equally; that the trusts to pay Rs 100 monthly to the children of each of the widows, on their respective deaths for ever, was void; that the gift of the residue to the widows in moieties was valid for their respective lives, but the gift to their issue on their respective deaths invalid, and that the trust for the worship, subject to the other trusts, so far as they were valid, was good. KALLY PROSONO MITTER v. He left a widow and one child, the plaintiff M, then about fourteen years of age. She had then been married for two years but up to the time of this suit she had had no children. By this will the testator directed that his immoveable property in Bombay should be formed into a trust, and that the trustees were to collect the income thereof. By the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of his will he directed that out of the trust fund Rs50 per month were to be paid both to his wife and daughter for their personal expenses. In the seventh clause he directed as follows: "After deducting expenses money is to be paid out of the net income, whatever it may amount to, for the personal expenses of my wife and my daughter M, and for the children of my daughter M after her death agreeably to the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of this will, and after paying the same, whatever income may remain is to be paid for the purposes of my wife and my daughter M and her children in such manner as my trustees may think* proper." The eighth clause directed that, if M should have children, the trust should stand valid during the lifetime, and the trust property should then be apportioned amongst the heirs. It then proceeded: "But should there be no children born of the womb of my daughter M, then after the death of M and my wife this trust is to become void, and the property delivered to such persons as my daughter M may direct it to be delivered by making her will." Held (1) that the direction in the seventh clause amounted to a gift of the residue for the use of the testator's wife and M, that his wife and M were, under the clause, entitled to the income of the fund in equal shares during their joint lives, and that the survivor would take the whole for her lifetime. (2) That M having no children at the date of the testator's death, the provision for her future children was void under the ruling in the Tagore case, 9 B L R, 377. L R, I A, Sup. Vol, 47. (3) That the direction, that if M had no children she might dispose of the property by will, was valid, and amounted to an absolute gift to her if she gave the requisite direction by will. The gift did not offend against the rule in the Tagore case. The persons to whom the property is given would take it from M, and not from the testator. The testator by his will further directed that Rs750 a month were to be paid to his wife for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the house and the worship of thakur (God). Held that no part of this sum could be awarded to M. The testator expected that she would live with the testator's wife and made no provision for the event of her ceasing to do so. The testator also disposed of ornaments described as "my own and my wife's ornaments." Held that the clause did not raise a question of election. The wife's stridhan ornaments would not fall within the clause if there were other ornaments which she wore and of which the testator had power to dispose. BAI MANUBAI v. DOSA MORARI

Any one of the sons dying sonless, the surviving sons shall be entitled to all the properties equally." Held that these words gave a legacy to the survivors contingently on the happening of a specified uncertain event, which had not happened before the period when the property bequeathed was distributable, that period of distribution being the time of the testator's death. It would be impossible to decide that the period was postponed by reason of the personal incapacity of some of the beneficiaries.

showing an intention on the testator's part that the enjoyment of the bequest should be of limited duration within the meaning of s. 159 of the Succession Act (X of 1965). To constitute a gift by implication in a will, there must be a reasonable degree of certainty as to the persons intended to take and the nature of the estates which they are intended to take. A direction that until the son or sons of the tenant for life of immovable property should attain a certain age, no person on behalf of such son or sons should ask the tenant for life for an account or raise any objection, does not sufficiently define the persons to take, or the estates in which they are to take, constitute a gift by implication. It would be difficult, if not impossible, for a Hindu to create by express terms the estates which arise by virtue of the doctrine of Hindu law in regard to the rights of male issue in ancestral property; and even where the hypothesis that the testator intended (under a misapprehension of the law) to create such estates affords a key to the will and gives an adequate explanation of the various estates which would have to be implied in order to give full effect to the different directions contained in the will, yet if the estates cannot be implied from the words used in the will, the Court cannot create such estates for the testator by implication, since to do so would be to construct a will for him based upon his supposed intention, not on the words which he has used. ANANDRAO VINAYAK v. They shall have no right to alienate the same by gift or sale, but they, their sons, grandsons, and their descendants in the male line shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall think fit for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors. If any die without leaving a male child, which God forbid, then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews, and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs." In a suit between the survivor of the three nephews and the testator's heir,—Held by the High Court a gift by will upon condition that the subject-matter should descend to heirs male only is void by Hindu law. Held also that the gift was bad in so far as it restricted the subject-matter of the gift to male descendants, but that the language used relating to the gift over to the testator's surviving nephew or nephews was not inconsistent with the intention of the testator that the whole augmented share should pass to the plaintiff, the sole surviving nephew; but that, having regard to the doctrine frequently acted

Held on appeal by the Privy Council that a gift by will, attempting to exclude the legal course of inheritance, is only effectual, in favour of such person as can take, to the extent to which the will is consistent with the Hindu law; and it is a distinct departure from that law to restrict the order of succession to males excluding females; that the attempt to alter the legal course of inheritance failed, and that the estate taken under the above clause was only for life. The gift over of a life-estate was competent; it being to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, and to take effect on the death of a person or persons then alive. On the death of one brother, his share went to the two other brothers, and on the death of one of the latter his augmented share, made up of his original and accrued share, went to the survivor. TAROKESSUR ROY v. Three documents, of which the second and third were executed by a testator after intervals of some years, together formed his will, containing a bequest of estate to his sons. This was held valid by the High Court, although the testator in the later documents had endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the estate contrary to law, and therefore inoperative; the principal of them being (a) prohibition of actual possession or alienation, by any son, of his share in the estate; and (b) direction that the whole estate should be managed in a common cutcherry, with religious trusts, the sons to get only the remaining amount of profit according to their respective shares in perpetuity. At the same time, the Court held good a provision for defraying the marriage expenses of sons from joint funds, with the direction in the will that until the youngest son should attain majority none of the sons should have a right to partition; any son who should separate from the others getting, up to the time of his attaining majority, merely maintenance, and not the profits accruing upon his share. A gift over was that on the death of a son surviving sons should take his share proportionately to their own, and that, if any of the sons so taking should die leaving sons, such sons should receive their proportionate parts of the deceased son's share: the first part of this provision was held good, not being invalidated by the second, which, as constituting a gift to an indefinite class, would take effect. The judgment of the High Court to the above

of the Courts, and probably also in the interests of the pleaders, suitors, and witnesses, whose religious observances might interfere with their attendance in Courts on particular days. On a close holiday, a Judge might properly decline to proceed with any enquiry, trial, or other matter on the civil side of his Court, and any party to any judicial proceeding could successfully object to any such inquiry being proceeded with, and, in the event of any such enquiry having been proceeded with in his absence and without his consent, would be entitled to have the proceeding set aside as irregular, probably in any event, and certainly if his interests had been prejudiced by such irregularity. But, at the furthest, the entertaining and deciding upon a matter within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court on a close holiday is an irregularity the right to which can be waived by the conduct of the parties, and a party, who on a close holiday does attend, and without protest takes part in a judicial proceeding, cannot afterwards successfully dispute the jurisdiction of the Judge to hear and determine such matter. *Bernett v. The daughter had married a man of means, and did not need any maintenance. Held, in a suit by the daughter for a construction of the will and for a specific sum to be set apart for her maintenance, that the plaintiff was not entitled to anything by way of a separate allowance for maintenance; she was only entitled under the will (apart from her annuity of Rs 5 a month) to be provided for in case she were otherwise unprovided for. 1. ——— Lodging or boarding-house-keeper and lodger—Inn-keeper—Liability for goods lost.—This suit was brought to recover the value of certain articles stolen from the plaintiff's rooms at an hotel in Bombay. The defendant was the licensed proprietor of the hotel, who was in the habit of entertaining, for shorter or longer periods, all comers willing to pay the usual charges, and the plaintiff was an exchange broker, doing business in Bombay, who had lived at the hotel for more than a year, paying for his board and lodging at first by the day, and afterwards by agreement at the rate of so much a month, but neither was the plaintiff under any obligation to remain, nor the defendant to accommodate him for any fixed time. Held that the relation of inn-keeper and guest (and not that of boarding-house-keeper and lodger) subsisted between the parties; and that the defendant was prima facie, and without proof of actual negligence, liable to make good the loss sustained by the plaintiff. There is no law but the Common Law of England to regulate the relation of inn-keeper and guest in Bombay, in a case between a European and Parsee. WHATELEY v. PALANJI PESTANJI . 3 Bom., O. C., 137

While there, she was seized with cholera and died. In consequence of the infectious nature of the disease, the plaintiffs were obliged to destroy the furniture which was in the rooms of the defendant's wife and used by her during her illness. The plaintiffs subsequently sued to recover the value of such furniture from the defendant. Held that, in the absence of evidence to show that the deceased had not taken as much care of the furniture as a

Held also that, as between the Ajmir constituent and the first indorser (the defendant and appellant), the giving by the Ajmir constituent to the defendant of another hundi which was never presented in Bombay for acceptance or payment was a consideration for the endorsement by the defendant to the Ajmir constituent of the hundi sent by the latter to the plaintiff and sued on by him. When the result of a joint attack by several persons on one man is the fracture of his arm, the offence committed is grievous hurt, and not assault. QUEEN v. RAMTOHUL SINGH . . . 5 W. R., Cr., 12

19. — Want of intention, likelihood, or knowledge that injury is likely to cause death.—When there is neither intention, knowledge, nor likelihood that the injury inflicted in an assault will or can cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide, but grievous hurt. QUEEN v. MEHA MEEAH . . . 2 W. R., Cr., 39

20. — Want of intention to cause death—Robbery.—Where, in a case of robbery attended with death, there was no intention of causing death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the conviction was altered from voluntarily causing hurt in committing robbery to voluntarily causing grievous hurt in committing robbery. QUEEN v. CHAKOR HURRE . . . 6 W. R., Cr., 16

21. — Grievous hurt in commission of lurking house-trespass—Penal Code, ss. 324, 457, 460.—A person who, in the commission of lurking house-trespass by night, voluntarily attempts to cause grievous hurt to the owner of the house who tries to capture him, is punishable under s. 460, and not under ss. 457 and 324 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN v. 22. — Conviction of grievous hurt—Constructive guilt—Abetment—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 114, 325, with 149.—Where the accused persons have been acquitted of rioting, they cannot be properly convicted of grievous hurt under s. 325 by the application of s. 149 of the Penal Code, where it has not been found that these persons or any of them were members of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object, of which grievous hurt was caused by any other member of the same assembly, or that the offence was such as each member of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. The mere presence as an abettor of any person would not, under the terms of s. 114 of the Penal Code, render him liable for the offence committed. Empress v. Chatradhari Goala, 2 Calc. W. N., 49, explained. In order to bring a person within s. 114 of the Penal Code, it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment, so that, if absent, he would have been liable to be punished as an abettor, and then to show that he was also present when the offence was committed. *Queen v. The evidence showed that the defendant was being driven in a carriage to her house through the streets of the town, between the hours of 7 and 8 P.M.; that the carriage was being driven at an ordinary pace, and in the middle of the road; that the night was dark, and the carriage without lamps, but that the horse-keeper and coachman were shouting out to warn foot-passengers; that the defendant's carriage came into contact with the complainant's father, an old deaf man, and that complainant's father was thereupon knocked down, run over, and killed. Held, upon a reference, that the question for the Court was whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently and rashly directed by the accused, and that there was no such evidence. The conviction was accordingly quashed. ANONYMOUS . . . 6 Mad., Ap., 32

26. — Hurt caused in house-breaking—Penal Code, ss. 459, 460.—Ss. 459 and 460 of the Penal Code provide for a compound offence, the governing incident of which is that either a "lurking house-trespass" or "house-breaking" must have been completed, in order to make a person who accompanies that offence either by causing grievous hurt or attempt to cause death or grievous hurt responsible under those sections. The sections must be construed strictly, and they are not applicable where the principal act done by the accused person amounts to no more than a mere attempt to commit lurking house-trespass or house-breaking. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. It was also found that it had not been shown that the plaintiff looked to the husband's credit, or that the husband had ever previously paid his wife's debts for her. Held that, under these circumstances, no agency on the wife's part for her husband had been established, and that the husband was therefore not liable to the claim. GIRDHARI LAL v. Fraud of guardian.—Where a wife (a minor) sought to enforce an ante-nuptial settlement as against the creditors of her husband, the settlement having been made and negotiated on her behalf by her father as her guardian; and the father, under such circumstances, had made a contract for her which was void as against third persons, on the ground of public policy,—Held that such a contract could no more be enforced by the minor against those third persons than it could be enforced by her, had she been an adult and made the contract herself. It is unnecessary, in order to avoid an ante-nuptial settlement as against a minor wife and her children, where the conduct of the father who brought about the marriage has been shown to be fraudulent, to show that the minor was a party to the fraud. *POGOSE v. Previous to this, M had obtained possession of that estate, and two months before the receipt of the letter she had contracted a second marriage. No settlement was made upon the marriage, and since the marriage her second husband had had the management of the property. In execution of a decree against the husband, his right, title, and interest in and to a portion of the property were put up for sale, and purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's right to possession was disputed by M, who contended that her husband took no interest in the two-thirds of the property which went to the Crown which could be attached and sold in execution. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish her rights over the property,—Held that the rights of her husband extended over the whole estate and were rights which could be seized in execution and sold. M's husband being without property and in great difficulties, and subsisting only on a life-pension of R118 a month, M was entitled to a settlement. *TOOLSEEMONEY DOSSEE v. [I. L. R., 1 All., 762]

14. ——— Legacy—Property purchased with legacy—Sale in execution of decree—Right of purchaser.—C, a married woman, was entitled, under her father's will, to certain money "absolutely for her sole use and benefit, free from the control, debts, and liabilities of her husband," and under such will such money was payable to her "on her sole and personal receipt." While so entitled, C borrowed from her husband the purchase-money of certain real property, on the understanding that she would pay him back such money when she obtained her legacy. The conveyance of such property was made to C, but not to her separate use. C subsequently assigned her legacy by sale, and out of the money obtained by such assignment repaid her husband the purchase-money of the property purchased. C and her husband were married before Act X of 1865 came into force, and had acquired an Indian domicile. Held that, even if English law were applicable in the case, and any interest in the property purchased passed to C's husband, it passed, in view of the agreement between her and her husband, on an implied contract that he would hold the property in trust for her, and that, where such property was purchased at a sale in the execution of a decree against J as his property, with notice that such property was claimed by C as her separate property, such purchase did not defeat the title of C. BERESFORD v. HURST. . . . I. L. R., 1 All., 772

15. ——— Married Woman's Property Act (III of 1874), ss. 7 and 8—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 4—Action for trover—Wife against husband.—The plaintiff was, at the time of her marriage in 1870, possessed in her own right of certain articles of household furniture, given to her by her mother. Since January 1875 she had lived separate from her husband, but the furniture remained in his house. In February 1875 her husband mortgaged the property to B, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent. In June 1875 one K C B, a creditor, obtained a decree against the husband and B, in execution of which he seized the furniture as the property of the husband, and it remained in Court subject to the seizure. In July 1875 the plaintiff instituted a suit in her own name in trover to recover the articles of furniture or their value from her husband, on the ground that they were her separate property, and in August 1875 she preferred a claim in her own name to the property under s. 88 of Act IX of 1850. It was found on the facts that the furniture was the property of the plaintiff. The husband and wife were persons subject to the provisions of the Succession Act, s. 4, and the Married Woman's Property Act, 1874. Held that, under s. 7 of the latter Act, the suit was maintainable against the husband. Held also that the judgment for the plaintiff in the suit, to recover the furniture or its value from the husband, could not, without satisfaction, have the effect of vesting the property in the husband from the time of the conversion, and therefore the claim under Act IX of 1850 was also maintainable. Brinsmead v. Harrison, L. R., 6 C. P., 584, followed. HARRIS v. HARRIS. HARRIS v. KOYLAS CHUNDER BANDOPADIA

16. ——— ss. 4, 7, 8—Execution of decree against separate property of wife—Domicile—Agency.—Act III of 1874 (The Married Woman's Property Act) applies to persons having an English domicile. Accordingly, the separate property of a married woman (whose husband's domicile is English) is alone bound by all debts, obligations, and engagements incurred by her in the management of a business carried on by her alone, and execution of any decree obtained against her in respect of such business should be limited to her separate property. The principle that the wife is impliedly carrying on business as the agent of the husband is excluded by the provisions of Act III of 1874. ALLUMUDDY v. BRAHAM

1. — Right to bastard's estate—

Escheat—Non-assertion of claim by Crown—Estoppel.—M, the widow and administratrix of a bastard who had died intestate and without issue, received a letter in 1841 from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury stating that they did not deem it expedient to take any steps for the assertion of the rights of the Crown with regard to her late husband's estate. Previous to this, M had obtained possession of that estate, and two months before the receipt of the letter she had contracted a second marriage. No settlement was made upon this marriage, and since the time of the marriage, M's second husband had had the exclusive management of the property. In execution of a decree against the husband, his right, title, and interest in and to a portion of the property were put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's right to possession was disputed by M, who contended that her husband took no interest in the two-thirds of the property which went to the Crown which could be attached and sold in execution. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish her rights over the property,—Held that the Crown would be estopped by the line adopted by the Commissioners of the Treasury in 1841 from asserting its claim to the two-thirds; and that M had a good title to the whole estate even as against the Crown. *TOOLSEEMONEY DOSSEE v. 2. — Letters of administration—

—The plaintiffs applied for probate of the will of one R D, to be granted to them as executor and executrix thereof. The Administrator General had entered a caveat and appeared to oppose the application. The petition for probate was therefore ordered to be treated as a plaint, both parties to file a written statement, and the case was set down to be heard. At the hearing it appeared R D was illegitimate, and the issue for trial was whether the document was or was not her will. Held that the Administrator General would be entitled to letters of administration under s. 15, Act XXIV of 1867, and that it was not necessary to make the Government a party to the suit. Seemle—The Administrator General would have been entitled to apply for letters of administration under s. 224 of Act X of 1865. *DEMELO v. of interest on debts bearing interest by contract. The debts on which interest ought to be allowed to creditors out of a surplus remaining in the Official Assignee's hands, after payment of the scheduled amount of debts, are such only as bear interest by the contract of the parties, either express or implied; not upon judgments or any other debts with respect to which interest could only be recovered and damages. IN THE MATTER OF MACCUBAN [1 Mad., 220 note

S. 42—Preferential claims—Costs—European assistants and native workmen of insolvent firm.—The application for payment under s. 42 of the Insolvent Act must be taken to imply consent to a dissolution of the contract of service by the filing of the petition. Claims, therefore, by servants of an insolvent firm only allowed up to date of insolvency, not to the end of the month. Claim of servant who had left insolvent's service before date of insolvency allowed, but only for so much as accrued due to him within the six months previous to insolvency. Sum agreed to be paid to an assistant as extra salary or remuneration for making up insolvent's statement to be laid before the creditors, disallowed. Costs of the applications allowed out of the estate. One claimant was manager of the insolvent's business at Simla on a salary of Rs50 per month, up to 11th April 1867, when one of the partners wrote to him, promising him commission to make his salary up to Rs500. During the six months previous to the insolvency he had received Rs3,100, being more than the salary claimed for six months. Claim disallowed. IN THE MATTER OF PARKER PITTAR & CO. [6 B. L. S. 44—Omission to claim dividend—Expunging names of creditors from schedule—Official Assignee a trustee for creditors admitted in schedule.—The applicant was a creditor of the insolvent, who filed their schedule in Bombay in July 1868. The schedule contained the names of twenty-six creditors, twenty of whom were residents in Karachi and six in Multan. The debts amounted, in the aggregate, to Rs51,819-13, and were all admitted, some of them being for trading sums. The applicant was the largest creditor on the schedule, his debt amounting to Rs27,500. The insolvent obtained their personal discharge in March 1869. Since the date of the insolvency, one dividend had been declared, viz., a dividend of one per cent. in 1870. Only one creditor had applied for and received that dividend. On the 5th July 1886, the applicant for the first time applied for a dividend on his claim. He was then, after so long a time, unable to adduce any proof in his own possession in support of his claim, but was ultimately allowed by the Official Assignee to prove his claim from the insolvent's books. Having thus proved his claim against the estate, the applicant obtained a rule on the 5th October 1887, calling on the other creditors of the insolvent to show cause why they should not come in and prove their claims, or, in default, why their names should not be expunged from the rule, that the Court had no power to expunge the name of a solvent's schedule. Maid, discharging the rule, that of Rs12,000 advanced, died on the 7th September 1874, leaving a will whereby he appointed his wife C sole executrix and devised to her factory X. On the 16th September 1876, another mortgage was executed whereby C further charged factory X with the repayment of further advances, and B mortgaged factory Y as a further security, the mortgage containing a stipulation for repayment, within one month after notice of the balance due in excess of Rs12,000. B became insolvent in July 1882. No demand was made. On the 5th January 1877 a balance of Rs27,552 remained due, which, with interest up to July 1882, was increased to Rs42,564. The liquidators of S & Co., who had in the meantime dissolved partnership, sought to prove against B's estate for Rs30,564 after deducting the Rs12,000 advanced to A. Held that the liquidators (if entitled to prove at all) could only prove for the difference between the sum of Rs30,564 and the value of the mortgage security after realizing or giving credit for the value of the first security. S. 8—Sale of mortgaged property—82 & 83 Vict., c. 71 (Bankruptcy Act, 1869)—Rules 78 to 81.—The insolvent filed their petition on 17th March 1878, and obtained their final discharge on 2nd September 1878. After their discharge, a creditor, to whom they had mortgaged certain property, made an application for the sale of the mortgaged properties, and the petitioner prayed for an order for an account of what was due on the mortgage, and for a sale under the conduct of the Official Assignee; that he should be at liberty to bid and set off the amount of the purchase against the sum due to him; that if any other person became the purchaser, the proceeds should be paid to him in liquidation of his debt, and that, after crediting that amount, the applicant might rank as a creditor to the estate for any remaining balance. The Court ordered the sale to be made as prayed in the petition, the Official Assignee to reserve a price on the property, and duly advertise it for sale; if not sold by public auction, application should be made to the Court by the Official Assignee for leave to sell by private contract. 9. Distribution of assets—Creditor taking benefit of property which does not pass to Assignee.—The principle that one creditor shall not take a part of the fund which otherwise would have been available for the payment of all the creditors, and at the same time be allowed to come in out of the remainder of that fund, does not apply where that creditor obtains by his diligence something which did not, and could not, form a part of the fund. INSOLVENT ACT (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21)

the firm to which objection could be taken. In the first half of the year 1890 the insolvent must have sustained heavy loss, as his mercantile assets over liabilities, which on the 31st December 1889 were Rs. 50,794, were on the 30th June 1890 reduced to Rs. 29,612. The charges, however, against the insolvent were based upon his conduct subsequently to the latter date. On that day (30th June 1890) the insolvent nominally possessed four lakhs of rupees, the saleable value of which was about 2½ lakhs. With his finances in this state the insolvent speculated in exchange, and in six months (viz., before the 31st December 1890) he had lost his four lakhs of nominal capital, and 19 or 23 lakhs of rupees besides. The Court held (1) as to the first ground of opposition that the insolvent was guilty of rash and reckless speculation. This, however, was not an offence within the meaning of s. 51 of the Indian Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21). When the insolvent entered into the contracts which had resulted in the loss, he had a fair capital, and though his speculations were excessive in amount, he had a fairly reasonable expectation that there would not be such a fall in exchange as would more than absorb his assets. (2) As to the second and third grounds of opposition, that they were proved in respect of the insolvent's transactions subsequently to December 1890, and that the insolvent was guilty of gross misconduct in contracting debts, having no reasonable or probable expectation, at the time when they were contracted, of paying them, and that his conduct fell within the purchase of s. 51 of the Insolvent Act. In December 1890 the insolvent was bankrupt to the extent (at all events) of over 16 lakhs, and had on hand large forward contracts which then showed a further probable loss. In that position he entered into further large speculative sales of exchange. He had then no assets with which to meet any loss. (3) As to the fourth ground of opposition, that it was proved. (4) As to the fifth ground of opposition, that it was not established. On the 18th April 1891 the insolvent called a meeting of creditors and laid a not very candid or truthful statement of his affairs before them. Nothing was then arranged, and the meeting was adjourned for a week, in order that a committee should examine the insolvent's position, etc. It was understood and arranged that in the meantime no steps should be taken against the insolvent, and that he should keep his affairs in statu quo. The insolvent, however, swore that he understood he was to make no large payments, but that he was to keep the firm going. During that week the insolvent paid Rs. 193 due on a bill to one of the Banks and Rs. 472 on a draft account, a few insignificant current expenses and Rs. 1,000 to his solicitors, who were preparing a trust-deed to be carried before the creditors. The Court was of opinion that the conduct of the insolvent in making these payments did not amount to the offence charged in the fifth ground of opposition, obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors, viz., by making false representations to them. (5) As to the sixth ground, that it was not established, On the 14th March the insolvent, in answer to enquiries, had assured the manager of the Chartered Bank that his

(c), of the Lower Burma Courts Act. The punishment which can be awarded under s. 50 of the Insolvent Act is a punishment for something which the person to be punished has done, and is not inflicted in order to compel him to do something in the future, and the case in which it is inflicted is therefore a criminal case. *Rash Behary Roy v. IN RE MANIKJI SHARVATI KAKA and s. 47—Conduct of insolvent amounting to offences within ss. 50, 51—Conduct of insolvent considered with reference to the following charges filed against him by opposing creditors, viz., reckless speculation; contracting debts without reasonable expectation of paying them; misconduct in contracting debts; concealment of property; obtaining forbearance by false representations; undue preference.—The insolvent had for many years carried on business in Bombay as a merchant. His firm (Messrs. B. and A. Hormaji) had been established in 1830 by his uncle and father. On the death of the latter in 1882, the insolvent was left the sole surviving partner, and from that time until his failure he carried on the business alone. The failure took place in April 1891, and on the 1st May 1891 he was adjudicated an insolvent. His liabilities were stated to be Rs. 47,98,591; his good assets Rs. 5,13,903, and his doubtful assets Rs. 60,014. His discharge was opposed by six Banks in Bombay with which he had had dealings. The grounds of opposition were as follows:—(1) Reckless speculation; (2) contracting debts without any reasonable expectation, at the time when the same were contracted, of paying the same; (3) gross misconduct in contracting debts; (4) concealment of property; (5) obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them; (6) contracting debts by means of false preferences; (7) fraudulently and with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors or of giving an undue preference to creditors, having discharged a debt due by the insolvent. It appeared that down to the end of 1889 there was nothing in the dealings of

Effect of—Interest received after order of discharge.—s. 59 and s. 7—Order of discharge, an insolvent's estate became vested in the Official Assignee, who paid the scheduled creditors the principal of their debts. A discharging order was then made under s. 59 of the Insolvent Debtors Act (11 Vict., c. 21). At the date of such order the Official Assignee had £143-1-8 to the credit of the insolvent's estate. He subsequently received the interest on certain securities which had been bequeathed to the insolvent for his life before the date of the vesting order. Held that the discharging order did not make the vesting order void, nor as regarded the estate vested in the Official Assignee did it revert immediately the right of property in the insolvent; that creditors are entitled to interest carrying debts out of a surplus remaining in the Official Assignee's hands after payment of the scheduled amount of debts; that, notwithstanding the discharging order, the Court might direct the £143-1-8, and the interest subsequently received, to be paid to the insolvent's creditors rateably in respect of interest on their debts calculated down to the date of the discharging order; and that the balance should be paid to the insolvent or his representative; that the interest subsequently received by the Official Assignee was "neither after-acquired property" within the meaning of s. 59 nor "a debt growing due to the insolvent before the Court shall have made its order" within the meaning of s. 7 of 11 Vict., c. 21. When he had completed the term of his imprisonment, he left Bombay, and went to Morar West Province. In August 1886, the Official Assignee was informed that the insolvent was possessed of landed property at Aligarh, and also considerable moveable property. On the 25th August 1886, the Official Assignee obtained a rule nisi calling on the insolvent to show cause why he should not hand over all this property to the Official Assignee for the payment of creditors. On the 10th August 1887, an order was made by the Insolvent Court under s. 58 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21) directing the insolvent to appear before the Court on the 21st September 1887, to be examined touching his estate and effects and dealings and transactions. The insolvent appeared against this order, and contended that the Court had no greater powers than those possessed by the High Court, and consequently could not order the attendance of any person resident more than two hundred miles from Bombay. Held that the Insolvent Court had jurisdiction to make the order. Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 135—Trial of issue before inspection granted.—The intention of s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) is to give the Court the power of raising and determining an issue for the exclusive purpose of deciding the right to discovery of evidence which is to be used at the trial, and therefore, from the nature of the case, before the hearing of the cause. It should be a rule of practice that when an order is made under s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) by the Judge in chambers, the suit should be set down for the trial of the particular issue as well as of the cause itself when it comes to a hearing before the same Judge. *AMRABHOY HURBHOY v. Inspection of accounts—Suit for wrongful dismissal.—In a suit for wrongful dismissal of a servant of a gas company, in which the plaintiff alleged that the motive for dismissing him was his discovery of certain irregularities of the manager with regard to money-matters.—Held that he was entitled to inspect the accounts which had been checked by himself while in the company's service, the press-copy letter-book containing copies of correspondence regarding his own conduct while in the company's service, and the account of a particular item in respect of which he alleged he had made discoveries that he imputed to the manager as the cause of his dismissal. *MITCHELL v. Time for ordering defendant to furnish list of documents.—The Court will not order a defendant to furnish the plaintiff with a list of documents till after the plaintiff shall have filed his written statement. OGRE v. KUNAS

2. Practice—Affidavit of documents—Insufficiency of affidavit already served—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 131 and 133.—

Before the Court will make an order under s. 133 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the preliminary steps mentioned in s. 131 must be taken by the party applying for the order. MONENDRO NATH DAWAN v. ISHUN CHUNDER DAWY

3. Production of documents—Discovery—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 131, 136.—If a notice under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code be not answered as provided by s. 132, the party seeking the inspection of documents may apply for an order under s. 133, and his application must be supported by an affidavit. The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order under s. 136, unless the provisions of s. 134 are strictly complied with. DHARY v. RAJ PERSHAD. I. L. R., 14 Cal., 768

4. Discovery—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 129, 136—Discovery of documents—Pardanashin women.—In a suit brought by two Mahomedan pardanashin ladies for recovery of immovable property by right of inheritance, an order was passed, under s. 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, requiring the plaintiffs to declare by affidavit "all the papers connected with the points at issue in the case which were or had been in their possession or control." After some ineffectual proceedings, the plaintiffs were peremptorily ordered to file their affidavit on a certain date. On that date an affidavit was filed on their behalf by their brother and took the affidavits and list were considered defective upon several grounds, one of which was that the affidavit ought to have been made by the plaintiffs personally. Further time was then given to the plaintiffs to amend these defects, and ultimately they filed an affidavit purporting to be made by them personally, praying that the Court would have it verified in any manner thought proper, provided that their pardanashin were not interfered with. The Court, under s. 136 of the Code, dismissed the suit for want of prosecution, in consequence of the orders under s. 129 not having been complied with, though ample opportunity had been given to the plaintiffs, and no sufficient ground for non-compliance had been shown. Held, without going into the question regarded himself, the third defendant was collud- ing with the plaintiff. Under the circumstances, he might be considered a "party opposite" to the first two defendants, although eventually the Court might not be able to make any order between him and them. *ANANDRAO VITRAL v. 20. Affidavit of documents.—Sufficiency of—Practice—Right to put in further affidavit in support of claim of privilege where original affidavit is not sufficient—Documents referred to in pleadings as stating facts on which party settling them up relies.—Where an affidavit of documents stated, with regard to certain documents of which the plaintiffs asked for inspection, that the defendants objected to produce them for inspection "because such documents were obtained after dispute arose, and for purposes of litigation that might arise between them and the plaintiffs,"—Held, in an application for their production and inspection, that the affidavit was not sufficient to support the defendants' claim to privilege. Held also in such an application the party claiming privilege is entitled to put in and use a further affidavit in support of the claim of privilege, and is not confined to the grounds made in the affidavit in which the claim is first set up. McCorquodale v. Bell, I. L. R., 1 C. P. D., 471, referred to. Where, however, the party comes into Court relying on the original affidavit as sufficient to support his claim of privilege, but asks the Court, if it should think otherwise, for leave to put in a further affidavit in support of his claim, quære whether he should be allowed to do so. In a suit brought in January 1884 to recover money for work done and materials supplied in the erection of certain mills for the defendants, in which the defence was that the quality of the work was inferior to that contracted for, and the defendants stated in their written statement that, "in consequence of the information which they had received with regard to the quality of the work done by the plaintiffs, they caused the same to be inspected by two independent engineers, in the month of July 1893, and they at once discovered such extensive defects therein that the costs of making good such defects will far exceed any possible sum due to the plaintiffs,"—Held that the defendants could not set up a claim of privilege for the reports of the two engineers. Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia, I. L. R., 2 C. P. D., 644, referred to. Where a party expressly refers to documents in the pleadings as the source of his own information and knowledge of facts relevant to the suit and then sets up those facts by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim, he cannot afterwards attempt to make the case that the documents are confidential, and intended merely for his legal advisers, or for the purpose only of evidence in the case. *Umaria Churn Sen v. The plaintiff further alleged that he had received none of the money, and that no money had been paid by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the third defendant in his presence. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took out a summons against the third defendant for inspection of certain account books and documents. It was objected that no question was raised in the suit between the third defendant and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and that consequently, under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the latter were not entitled to inspection. Held that inspection must be given. Discovery—Affidavit of documents when there are several plaintiffs, some of whom are in England—Practice—Privilege—Grounds of privilege.—Where there are several plaintiffs, all of them must join in making the affidavit of documents, unless some specific reason to the contrary are shown. The fact that some of the plaintiffs reside in England is no reason why they should be excused from making such affidavit. Documents which contain the purport of interviews with, and of advice received from, the plaintiffs' solicitors and counsel as to the plaintiffs' position in regard to their said claim and as to the steps to be taken thereon, are privileged. Documents which record the steps taken by the plaintiffs from time to time in prosecuting their claim against the defendant are not privileged. Opinions upon, or steps taken in reference to, a suit in which plaintiffs and defendants are putting forward opposing contentions cannot be said to relate solely to the case of the plaintiff, and are not privileged. *RUKHIE v. inspection. On a rule granted by the High Court to show cause why the order for inspection should not be set aside, it was contended that the search-warrant had been granted without proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials; that it was bad on the face of it, as it did not "specify clearly," as directed in Form VIII, sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code, whose khatra books were to be produced; and that there was nothing in the criminal law to enable a Court to make an order for inspection of documents by the prosecution in a criminal case. Held per NORRIS, J., that, assuming the contention as to the search-warrant arose on the rule as granted, the warrant must be looked at as a whole, and so looked at it sufficiently and clearly showed that it was the khatra books of A which were referred to as being essential to the inquiry and the objects of the directed search; nor was there anything to show that the warrant was issued otherwise than regularly and in due course. Per NORRIS, J.—Though the Courts in England have constantly refused to compel discovery in criminal cases, on the ground that no man should be compelled to produce evidence to criminate himself, the Legislature in this country has authorized the production, and under certain circumstances the compulsory production, of an accused person's documents in Court. When once an accused person's documents are in the possession of the Court by virtue of the due execution of a search-warrant issued under the provisions of s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is no distinction between such documents and those of any description found upon his person at the time of his arrest or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, and it was never doubted that the latter may be used in evidence against him. If, as laid down in the case of Dillon v. O'Brien, 20 Irish L. R., 300, the right to seize and detain property of any description in the possession of a person lawfully arrested for treason, felony, or misdemeanor, rests "upon the interest which the State has in a person justly or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice and in a prosecution once commenced being determined in due course of law," a right to inspect such property must exist, as well as a right to inspect and detain it, and the proper persons to inspect it are those conducting the prosecution. It would, moreover, be unreasonable that the police or those conducting the prosecution should not have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents, etc., found on a prisoner when arrested, or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them in evidence. Per GHOSH, J.—The contention as to the validity of the search-warrant did not arise on the rule as granted, but semble that the search-warrant was bad in law, no summons under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code having been, in the first instance, issued for the production of the documents, and there being no evidence to show that they would not be produced; summons only; that although the warrant was not specific, still, inasmuch as no objection was raised to the form of the warrant before the Magistrate, and the accused had not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents being somewhat indefinite, and it was clear what was really meant, the objection as to the form of the warrant should be disallowed. Per GHOSH, J.—There is no doubt that by the criminal law of this country, as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code since 1861, an accused person may be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of criminating him. The Magistrate has to determine at the time when he makes an order under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or issues a search-warrant under s. 96, whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry; but when they are brought into Court, the inspection should not rest with the Magistrate who does not prosecute and has no interest one way or the other in the result of the prosecution. It is reasonable that those who conduct the prosecution should have such inspection, for the production of such documents is for the purpose of using them in evidence, and this could not be done unless the prosecution had an opportunity of inspecting them. In the case of a search or seizure by the police under Ch. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecutor would necessarily have an opportunity of looking at the documents and articles seized, and there is no reason why he should not have the same opportunity or privilege where, under the order of the Court, any particular document or other thing is seized under a search-warrant and brought up to the Court. Bearing in mind the purpose for which any document or thing is seized and brought before the Court, it seems that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, etc., intended by implication that the prosecution should, under the order of the Court, have the power to inspect them, and determine whether they should go in as evidence. Held per GHOSH, J.—For the reasons above given—that the Magistrate had power to allow the inspection, but such inspection must be limited to the books named in the search-warrant. IN THE MATTER OF THE SEIZURE OF *AMRUT MAHOMED. This application was refused. I. LIFE INSURANCE.

1. Assignment of policy—

Death of assignee—Death of assured—Notice by assignee to company—Payment of premium by executors of assignee—Absence of legal personal representative of assured—Refusal to pay over—A, having insured his life in a certain Life Insurance Company, assigned his rights under the policy to B, the assignment on the face of it expressing no consideration whatever. The fact of the assignment was notified to the company. B, after paying all premium due, died, appointing C and D his executors, who took out probate of his will, and paid all subsequent premium on the policy. A died, and C and D then demanded payment of the policy-money. The company, however, refused payment unless C and B first obtained the concurrence of the legal representative of A to the payment. Held that the company were justified in refusing to pay the money in the absence of the legal representative of A.

2. Age of assured—Proof of age—

Onus of proof—Mistake in statement of age—Frank.—A insured his life with the defendant company. By the terms of the policy the declaration of the assured as to his age was made the basis of the contract, and the policy was issued, subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration were untrue, the policy should be void. The assurance was also expressly made, subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. The prospectus contained the following provision with regard to the age of parties insured: "Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time; if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim;" and after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age," which the company would accept, the prospectus continued: "The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible and get the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced." A died, and his administrators claimed the amount of the policy. Held that the above condition contained in the prospectus, which must be read into the policy, imposed on the assured or his representatives the obligation of giving proof of age before the company could be called upon to pay. If the evidence had been given in the lifetime of the assured, and an admission of age was attached to the policy, no further proof would be needed, and the onus of disputing the age would be thrown on the company; but in the absence of such evidence and of such admission, it lay upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured. The prospectus of the company contained a further provision that "policies held by parties on their own lives are indisputable on any ground whatever except fraud." Held that this provision did not relieve those claiming upon the policy from the burden of giving proof of age, but it covered a misstatement as to age as well as other misstatements, provided they were not fraudulent. It relieved the assured from the legal effect which an innocent misrepresentation as to age would otherwise have had under the strict terms of the contract. The result therefore was that the plaintiffs should give proof of the age of the assured, but, if such proof disclosed nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policy would not be vitiated. Subject to the above terms of the prospectus, any untrue in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement as to the age of the assured amounts to a warranty, and the warranty being broken, the risk under the policy would not attach. ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SEACURITY LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. 3. Premiums on policy—Condi*tion of repayment of premium*—Waiver—Sterling premiums—Case stated under Ch. XXXVII, Code of Civil Procedure.—An insurance company, in order to carry out an agreement with the assured to convey a reversionary policy into a policy of sterling value, made an endorsement of the conversion on his policy, being stated that such conversion was in consideration of all future premiums being paid in sterling. The policy so endorsed was re-delivered to the assured without any demand for the repayment of the first sterling premium. Subsequently, and before the first sterling premium became due, the assured died. Held that the repayment of sterling premium as a condition precedent to the right to the sterling assurance had been waived, and that the representatives of the assured were entitled to payment of the full amount of the sterling policy. *Canning v. the goods, that no claim for constructive total loss was maintainable. In an action upon a policy of marine insurance the evidence given with respect to the loss of the ship was as follows: "The vessel grounded near Dwarka. After the vessel struck, the water constantly broke right over all. The cargo was all under water. The labourers were only able to work at ebb tide, and at high tide they could only see the top of the vessel's masts. The vessel lay where she stranded seven days, and was then raised by cranes." Some of the goods on board were insured by a policy which contained the clause "war-ranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." It was contended for the plaintiffs that the ship had "sunk," and that the damage to the goods was therefore covered by the policy. Held that where a vessel runs aground and lists over, and is in consequence covered by the high tide, which causes damage to goods on board, it cannot be said that she has "sunk" within the meaning of the word as used in a policy of insurance, and therefore that a claim for particular average cannot be sustained under a clause in the policy—"warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." LATHAM v. HURDVOGHAND SOORATRAH [L. T. R., 4 Bom., 314]

11. "Interest or no interest?" effect of these words in a policy—Stat. 19 Geo. II, c. 37—Loan on a policy—Insurance effected after loss of subject-matter of insurance—Meaning and effect of the words "lost or not lost" in a policy.—Policies of insurance between natives of India (those, at least, which do not contain the words "interest or no interest") are to be construed in the same way as such insurances have been uniformly construed by the general law merchant in Western Europe, viz., as contracts of indemnity. A certain trade is carried on between native merchants in Western India with the costs of Africa and Madagascar by means of native vessels which leave the Indian ports early in the year, and after remaining in the ports of Africa and Madagascar for four or five months, leave on the return voyage about August or September. This trade consists in shipping goods at the Indian ports, to be disposed of at the African and Madagascar ports, and purchasing with the proceeds fresh goods to be similarly disposed of in the home ports. To enable traders to embark in this venture, it is their practice to borrow money of merchants on what is termed "a run," that is, money borrowed on the condition that it is not to be repaid except in case of the safe arrival of the goods in the home ports on the return voyage, in which event the loan becomes repayable with interest at a high rate. Held that having regard to the long-established practice in the port of Bombay of insuring such risks, the interest of the lender of such a loan in the goods on board a ship on her return voyage to India is an insurable interest. Semble—That an aving loan does not give the lender a charge on the goods. Held that a policy of marine insurance on goods is not invalid by reason of its having been effected subsequently to the loss by insured—Action brought before expiration of six months from date of notice—Constructive total loss—Meaning of the words "sunk," "stranded," "wrecked" and "lost".—Where insurers on receiving notice of a claim made against them under a policy of insurance distinctly repudiate and deny that any claim exists against them or that the party serving such notice has any right to recover against them, there arises an immediate right to sue, and the insured is not bound to wait for the expiration of six months before taking proceedings to enforce his claim. Where it appeared upon evidence that goods on board a ship that was wrecked on a voyage from Karachi to Bombay, although much damaged by sea-water, were nevertheless of such merchantable value as to make it worth while to send them on to their port of destination, Held, in an action against the insurers of age loss—Liability of underwriters.—In a policy of insurance effected in Bombay upon goods shipped from Calcutta to Jeddah, two clauses were inserted in writing, the first of the policy being in the Gujarati language, and was to the following effect: "Insurance upon the goods to be without damage. The loss arising from damage is to be on the head of the owner of the goods." Held the underwriters of such a policy are liable to the insurer for a particular average loss where the vessel in which the insured goods are shipped is stranded, sunk, or burnt. ESMAIL v. SHAMJEE POONJANI [L. T. R., 2 Bom., 550]

8. Goods partly in bales and partly in cases—Insurance for gross amount.—A policy was effected upon a quantity of piece-goods, part in bales and part in cases. The bales and cases were separately enumerated and separately valued in the body of the policy, but the gross total was made up. Held that the words "free from particular average," following directly upon the gross total, must be taken to apply to the whole value of both lots, and not separately to the bales and cases separately to the cases. BEKROOPOO SEETTY v. HURBUTT RAMOHUN [2 Hyd., 74] in the hands of mahajans, to be paid to whomsoever might be entitled to them,—Held, first, that the loss by robbers, although not expressly mentioned in the policy, was one of the perils insured against; second, that the judge below being erroneously of opinion that when the goods were once landed damaged there was nothing to do but to sell every-thing for the benefit of underwriters, and having consequently recorded no finding on the material question whether the whole or any part of the cargo was practically capable of being sent in a marketable state to the port of destination, the suit must be remanded, in order that the judge might determine whether there was a constructive total loss which entitled the plaintiffs to abandon; and if not, that he might award such a proportion of the value of the iron and of the jagari and oil which were actually lost, and of the amount of the deterioration in the cotton seeds and other articles, as the sum insured by the defendant bore to the whole sum, taking into account also in that case what proportion the sum insured bore to the actual value of the goods. Dwarkanadas Lalubhai v. Adak Ali Surtan Ali [3 Bom., A. C., 1]

23. Value of ship when repaired.—In a suit to recover the amount of insurance on a ship which had been abandoned on an alleged constructive total loss, it appeared that the ship had sustained severe injury from foul weather, but that her value, after being repaired, would exceed the cost of repairing her by about 8,000 dollars. Held therefore that there was not a constructive total loss, and that, in order to establish a constructive total loss, there must have been a threatened destruction, or absolute temporary privation, of the insurer's ownership, or an alienation of his property in the thing insured. Gahan v. Owen [Bourke, O. C., 17; Cor., 149]

24. Notice of abandonment.—A cargo, consisting of railway sleepers, was insured by the plaintiffs in the ship Heimdal from Geography Bay to Calcutta, and expressed in the policy to be warranted from all risks, except total loss. In proceeding up the river Hooghly, in charge of a pilot, on the 30th April, the vessel grounded on the Kungatulla Sand, heeled over, and lay imbedded in the sand. Endeavours were made unsuccessfully to get her off. On 5th May, Lloyd's surveyor inspected the vessel, and reported that, considering her position, the state of the tide at that season, and the expense of getting her off, it was unavoidable to go to further expense in doing so; and that the cost of repairs would, in all probability, amount to much more than the value of the ship when repaired. Some of the sleepers had been then jettisoned, and the surveyor recommended that the vessel and cargo should be abandoned and sold by public auction to the highest bidder. Attempts were made, but unsuccessfully, to get some of the cargo off, and the sleepers were of such a quality that they would not float. The consignees accordingly

22. Constructive total loss.—In a suit on a policy of insurance as for a total loss, where goods were shipped for the voyage from Surat to Kurrachee, and the vessel having sprung a leak was forced to put into Dwaraka, at which place the goods (with exception of some iron thrown overboard during the voyage) were landed and placed in a warehouse, from which a portion (some cargo oil and jagari) was carried off by robbers; and the residue of the cargo, consisting principally of cotton seeds which were dried and cleaned, was sold; and the proceeds, after deducting freight expenses, remained

19. Goods overvalued—Reason for overvaluation failing—Liability of underwriters.—Where, in a valual policy of insurance, the goods insured were valued at an amount greatly in excess of their real value, which amount was intended to include the amount in which the insured was liable to Government on account of bonds executed by him in respect of the goods insured, and after loss of the goods Government elected not to enforce the bonds,—Held that the underwriters were entitled to be subrogated in the amount of the bonds, and were liable to the insured only for the real value of the goods together with a fair profit. Harpas Purshoray v. Gajrabli [2 Bom., 23]

20. Abandonment—Notice of abandonment.—Where an insurance office is sued on a constructive total loss, there must be a distinct and decided abandonment of all right on the part of the insured. The notice of abandonment should be immediate. The question always is whether the delay in giving notice is reasonable, with reference to the particular circumstances and the owner's means of ascertaining the position of the ship; where the suit is for a total loss, the judgment may be as for an average loss. Speedice Ghoozal v. Apcar [Bourke, O. C., 391]

21. Abandonment of ship and cargo—Sale—Right of purchaser.—The ship Alahannee was wrecked and abandoned with her cargo to the underwriters. Nine cases, part of the cargo which with two others were separately insured, were recovered in good condition from the wreck. Of this all parties had notice. The wreck and cargo were subsequently sold by the ships' agents, who were also agents for the underwriters, for the benefit of all concerned, the cargo being described generally. Held that the nine cases did not pass to the purchaser at the sale, as they could not be legally abandoned; and on the facts that the plaintiffs to believe that they intended to sell more than what was ceded to the underwriters by the abandonment. Mitchell v. Gladstone [1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 408]

INTENTION OF PARTIES—concluded.

Intention as to future action, expressed between parties, not amounting to a contract—Effect in succession of reversionary heirs.—A mutual expression of intention on either side that the intention would be carried out, but no contract was made. A childless person, since deceased, expressed to the father of the minor son of his sister his intention to make the boy his heir, and that, if he, the intended donor, should have children of his own, he would give the boy a share of his property. The father assented and made over charge of the boy. The widow and mother of the deceased, taking his estate for their lives, admitted the boy to joint possession of the family estate expected upon their deaths, and that they had, in obedience to the known wishes of the deceased, recognized the boy as heir to him.  Held  that the reversions could only be deprived of the inheritance after the death of the widows, who could not transfer any estate to last beyond their own lives, by the act of the deceased in contracting with the father of the boy to make the boy the substantial question was whether the representations made between the two had amounted to a contract to that effect. On evidence wholly oral, it was found that no such contract had been made. Only enough had been said between the two to give rise to the expectation on either side that the boy would, the then intended course being followed, get the inheritance.

I MISCELLANEOUS CASES-

20th November 1891
 Subsequently, a suit for recovery of the sum of Rs. 1000 was filed by the plaintiff against the defendant in the Court of the District Judge, Calcutta. The plaintiff claimed that the sum of
 Rs. 1000 was due to him from the defendant by reason of a contract made between them on the 1st day of January 1890.
 The defendant denied the existence of such a contract and pleaded that the sum of Rs. 1000 was not due to the plaintiff from him.
 The Court found in favour of the plaintiff and ordered that the sum of Rs. 1000
 with interest should be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. The Court also ordered that the costs of the suit should be paid by the defendant.

twice credited as alleged by the obligor (appellant), the Court held that it had only once been credited. The respondent on cross-appeal claimed interest on the Rs 350 for six years and eight months at twelve per cent. per annum, on the strength of a stipulation in the bond that, from a certain date, interest should accrue on the principal; but the Court disallowed the accrue on the principal as payment of interest on the claim on the ground that payment was neither expressly or impliedly for nor contemplated by the parties, and because it was open to the respondent to take measures to realize the sum so paid instead of letting it lie over and double itself by interest. *Srinivasan v. 54. Mortgagee in possession—Suit for redemption.—The principle of construction, that when a creditor sues for his principal and interest (the latter being equal or more than equal at the time of the commencement of the suit to the principal) he is not debared from charging subsequent interest for the period during which he is kept out of his money by the debtor's resistance of the demand, is not applicable to a case in which a mortgagee in possession is not a party suing for the money, but the party resisting by every means in his power a claim to redemption and the final settlement of the account. Ajmer v. Kay Gopal Sircar 13 C. L. R., 523

56. Selling up adverse title.—In a suit to recover title-deeds and other property, the defendant claimed a certain sum as being due to him, and in the plaint the plaintiff offered to pay the defendant all that was due up to that date, provided the deeds and property were given up. The defendant, however, claimed a right to hold them under an adverse title. Held that the defendant was only entitled to interest up to the date of the plaint, and not up to the date when the money due was actually paid. *Juggernath Dass v. 58. Interest on price and charges not legally demandable in absence of special contract.—The defendant made an offer in writing to the plaintiffs for the purchase of 200 bales of pepper drill at Rs. 2d. A few days later the plaintiffs' salesman tendered for signature to the defendant an indent containing certain terms not contained in the original offer, and in particular containing the words, "Free Bombay Harbour and in-terest." This the defendant refused to sign. The plaintiffs, however, tendered out the goods, and on their arrival tendered them to the defendant, demanding at the same time such sums for charges, expenses, and interest as would have been due under a contract entered into on the added terms. These the defendant refused to pay. In a suit claiming the deficiency (after a sale by public auction of the 200 bales), Held that, in the absence of any contract to that effect, interest could not be legally demanded on the contract price, and still less could it be demanded on the incidental charges in the invoice. *Manohar Das v. In a suit brought in the High Court at Calcutta by a against the Official Assignee claiming the proceeds of the goods paid into the Insolvent Court, Held, on the Court making a decree in favour of the plaintiff, that the High Court, being a Court of law and equity, had power to award interest on the amount as against the Official Assignee. *Mitter v. 100. Interest, power of Court to allow—Actionable right to interest—Compound interest—Act XXXII of 1839 enables the Court to allow interest in certain cases, but does not create a right to interest which could be made the subject-matter of a suit. It is doubtful whether the Act gives power to allow compound interest on a debt, but even if there is such jurisdiction, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, will not allow compound interest except where it is expressly provided for by the agreement. MARSHALL v. BENGAJI SPINNING AND WEAVING CO.

101. Whether a Court is to allow interest from the date of the debt where there is no contract to pay, and no demand made for payment of interest.—In a suit for money lent without any written instrument, where it was found that there was no express contract to pay interest, but it was not found that any demand of payment was made in writing and that there was any demand giving notice to the debtor that interest would be claimed from the date of the demand, it was held that the creditor was not entitled to any interest before suit. B, after coming of age, contracted at Y to pay C the annual allowance, and ratified the contract which had been made by his mother. Held, in a suit for recovery of certain of the yearly payments, that the Court might decline to allow interest on the arrears found to be due prior to the commencement of the suit, there being no stipulation in the contract for interest, and might award interest on the amount decreed from the commencement of the suit to the date of the decree and costs, from the date of the decree until payment. 105. Discretion of Court.—Interest at the stipulated rate no matter how unusual, will be awarded down to decree. The rate at which subsequent interest is to be awarded is entirely in the discretion of the Court. 108. Interest where no rate is agreed on after certain time—Reasonable rate—Discretion of Court.—In a suit to recover a sum of money due on an agreement under the term of which interest for fifteen days only was payable at the rate of one rupee per diem.—Held that, as no rate was agreed upon after the expiration of the fifteen days, the Court had power to fix a reasonable rate of interest subsequent to that time. 127. Decree for sale in suit by puisne mortgagee—Rate agreed on in mortgage—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 10—Civil Procedure Code, s. 209.—Upon a claim by a puisne mortgagee to redeem prior incumbrances and in the alternative for a decree ordering the sale of the property mortgaged, the sale was decreed, with application of the purchase-money to pay incumbrances in their due order, and with redemption by the plaintiff of a prior mortgagee who was to have an option to redeem. As regards the Court's power to regulate the interest, held that, although in the decree for sale the rate of interest on the debt, payable to the mortgagee decreed, was reducible from the date of the decree holder, the rate stipulated, to the Court rate, an order from that effect could only be made for the benefit of the judgment-debtor as a party to the suit. The plaintiff, seeking to redeem a mortgage prior to the suit, must pay the interest at the rate agreed upon in the mortgage; there being no authority, either under s. 10 of Act XXIII of 1861 or under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 209, to reduce it to the Court rate. V intervened under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and applied that the house, if sold, should be sold subject to his mortgage. His application was dismissed, and he thereupon brought a suit (No. 648 of 1887) for a declaration that the house was not liable in execution of K's decree. That suit was dismissed by the lower Court, and V appealed. Pending the hearing of the appeal, he applied for and obtained under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code an injunction restraining the sale until the result of the appeal on his giving security for interest at six per cent, on Rs. 2,000, the acknowledged value of the house. The appeal was heard in due course and was dismissed with costs, and thereupon K, in execution of the decree in this last-mentioned suit (No. 648 of 1887), applied to recover the interest for which security was ordered to be given by the District Court. 122. A decree directed that from the original cause of action to date of suit, and from date of decision, interest should be given at 12 per cent.; and from date of decision to date of liquidation, interest should be given without specifying the rate. terest was claimed in the suit at the rate of Rs 1-8 per cent, per mensem as well for the period after as for the period before the due date of the bond. Held that, although cases might arise in which a jury or a judge might refuse to give a plaintiff any interest,

i.e., damages, post idem, at all, the circumstances would have to be of a very exceptional character as,

for example, where the interest contracted to be paid before due date was exorbitant and extortionate.

Cooke v. Fowler, L. R., 7 H. L., 27, referred to.Held that in determining the amount of damages

the question whether the plaintiff has unnecessarily delayed bringing his suit, and so allowed his claim to mount up to a sum far in excess of the principal money originally advanced, may be taken into consideration as a reason for not making the original rate of interest the basis on which to assess such damages.

the non-payment on due date, and the reasonable amount to which the obligee is entitled for such breach. The decision of the question by what stan-in each case upon its special circumstances. BissharDatta v. Udit Narain, L. T. R., 8 All., 486

and containing no express provision as to the payment for the breach of a contract. Such interest cannot be of the Transfer of Property Act binds the Court to computed down to the day fixed by the Court, accord-

Covenant to pay

take back this bond, and we shall continue to pay annually interest on the said amount at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensum; that should we in any year fail to pay the amount of interest, it shall, at the close of the year, be consolidated with the principal amount, and we shall pay compound interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensum. That, in the event of non-payment of the principal and interest on the expiration of the appointed time, the mortgagee "shall be at liberty to recover from us the whole amount due to him with interest by means of a law-suit." Held that the terms of the bond amounted to a covenant to pay interest at the stipulated rate after the period of three years, so containing an express covenant for the payment of interest at that rate, the interest was not affected by the

Payments made by the debtor had been appropriated by the creditor to payment of the interest on the bond bearing simple interest, while the compound interest, on the other hand, had been left to accumulate. The creditor sued the representative of the debtor after his decease, to enforce the mortgage bearing compound interest. The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was in force when the suit was instituted, but not when the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties commenced. Held, assuming that a discretionary power to a Court remained under s. 209, Civil Procedure Code, to decree interest to run, at less than the contract rate, in a suit commenced before Act IV of 1882 became law, still the best guide to discretion in this case was to be found in s. 86 of that Act, which required the Courts to decree mortgage-debts with interest at the rate provided by the mortgagee (if to that rate no valid legal objection could be taken) down to the date fixed for realization. *RAMESWAR KOER v. On its being contended that where an instrument is completely silent about interest, s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, has no application, and no interest can be allowed, —Held that the mercantile usage which would have enabled the Court to award interest on such an instrument prior to the passing of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, has not been abrogated by that Act, though the interest that can now be awarded is limited by s. 80 to six per cent. S. 80 governs alike the case in which interest, but no rate of interest, is mentioned in the instrument, and that in which interest is not mentioned. Instalments—Penalty—Liquidated damages.—A executed an instalment-bond for R1,000 in favour of B, in which he stipulated that from the year 1271 (1864) to 1275 (1868), both inclusive, R200 should be paid in the month of Jaishta (May 13th to June 12th) in each year, and that "in the event of any instalment being then due, all the remaining instalments should be deemed lapsed, and the principal should be paid with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per mensem, from the date of the instalment-bond." The first instalment, which fell due on the last day of Jaishta 1271 (12th June 1864) was paid only on the 13th Falgun of the same year (13th February 1866), other instalments were paid in Jaishta 1272, 1273 (1865, 1866). B accepted payment of these instalments as part payment of the principal sum due to him, and never made any demand for interest under the terms of the bond. The further instalments due in Jaishta 1274 and 1275 (May 13th to June 12th, 1867 and 1868) were never paid. On 13th Kartick 1275 (30th October 1868) B sold the bond and all his interest thereunder to C for R800. On 2nd Jaishta 1276 (14th May 1868) C brought a suit against A for the whole amount of the bond with interest thereon at 10 per cent. per mensem, from the date thereof till the date of suit, namely, R6,099, less the amount R600, which had been realized by B in the three instalments for 1271, 1272, and 1273 (1864, 1865, and 1866). The Judge awarded him only the amounts of the unpaid instalments for 1274 and 1275 (1867 and 1868), namely, R400 with interest from the date of the instalments till date of suit at one per cent. per mensem, in all R488 odd, proportionate costs and interest on all at one per cent. per mensem till date of realization. On appeal to the High Court by C,—Held that the clause in the bond relied on was a mere penalty clause. The original obligee of the bond having waived the exaction of any penalty, C was not entitled to more than the Judge had awarded him. BOLEY DOBEY v. SIDESWAR RAO BABOO ROY KUR 4 B. L. In the event of default, he shall pay interest at Rs1 per diem. Held that, looking to the whole instrument, it was equitable to hold that the term "interest" was not intended to mean interest in the strict sense of that term, but a penalty, and the amount of interest should be so treated, and a reasonable amount only be allowed. 210. ————— Penalty.—A bond for the repayment of money lent provided that such money should be repaid on a certain date; that interest at the rate of Rs7-8-0 per cent. per annum should be paid at the end of every year; and that, if default were made in the payment of interest, such money should be repaid with interest at the rate of Rs37-8-0 per cent. per annum. The bond contained an hypothecation of immoveable property as collateral security. In a suit on the bond the obligee, the obligor having failed to pay any interest, claimed interest from the date the bond became due to the date of institution of the suit at Rs37-8-0, the defaulting rate. Held, following the principle laid down in Bansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan, I. L. R., 3 All., 260, that the provisions of the bond, as regards the rate of interest payable on default of the payment of interest, were in their nature penal and so excessive that, as a matter of equity, they should not be enforced. Held also, with reference to the question what was a reasonable amount of compensation for the obligor to pay for breach of contract, that unpaid interest should bear interest at the rate of Rs11-4-0 per cent. per annum from the date of default to the date of the High Court's decree. KHURRAM SINGH v. The obligees sued the obligor upon the bond claiming to recover the principal sum and interest from the date of the bond for three years eleven months and twenty days less different sums amounting to Rs 600 paid from time to time on account at the defaulting rate of Rs 2 per cent. Held that having regard to the fact that the security of property was given for the loan

Accordingly the Court made a decree giving the obligees interest on the principal sum from the date of the bond to the date of the decree at Rs 40 per cent per mensem and compound interest from the date of default in the payment of interest to the date of the decree at the rate of four annas per cent per mensem by way of damages for such default. Bansidhar v Bu Ali Khan 1 L R 2 All 260 followed. Mackintosh v Wingrove 1 L R 4 Cal 187, dissented from. KHARAG SINGH v BHOLA NATH

But a condition that, upon failure by the borrower to pay the interest when due, both compound interest and an increased rate shall be payable, amounts to a penalty, inasmuch as the two stipulations together cannot be regarded as a fair agreement with reference to the loss sustained by the lender. In a bond, dated in February 1877, for a sum of money payable in June 1882, it was provided that interest should be paid at the rate of ₹9 per cent. per annum on the puranmashi of every Jaith, and that, if the interest were not duly paid, the rate should be increased to ₹15 per cent. per annum, and compound interest should be payable. There was no provision for payment of interest from the time when the principal became due. In December 1884 the obligee brought a suit on the bond against the obligor, claiming interest from the date of the bond to the date of the institution of the suit at Rs 15 per annum, and compound interest for the same period at the same rate. Held that the stipulations contained in the bond must be regarded as penal and it was therefore the Court's duty to limit the penalty to what was the real amount of damage sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's breach of the contract to pay the interest at the due date. Held that for this purpose the proper course was to reduce the interest to Rs 9 per cent per annum, reckoned at compound interest with yearly rests to the due date of the bond, and that inasmuch as the plaintiff was to blame for not having enforced his remedy at an earlier date he should only recover simple interest at Rs 9 per cent from the due date of payment, upon the entire sum which was due when the bond became due, the principal added to the compound interest calculated at Rs 9 per cent. The same obligee held another bond executed by the same obligors in June 1879 for a sum of money payable in June 1882 with interest at Rs 9 per cent per annum. There was a

It was also found that although, under the terms of the bond, the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied, in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one, which the Court had undoubted power to refuse to enforce, and which, under all the circumstances, it would be unreasonable and inequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to; and that, under the circumstances, compound interest should not be allowed. *Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v. bargain—Bond—Compound interest.—In a suit for the recovery of a principal sum of ₹99 due upon a bond, with compound interest at two per cent. per mensem, it was found that advantage was taken by the plaintiff of the fact that the defendant was being pressed in the tahsili for immediate payment of revenue due, to induce him to execute the bond charging compound interest at the above-mentioned rate, notwithstanding that ample security was given by mortgage of landed property. It was also found that although, under the terms of the bond, the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied, in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one, which the Court had undoubted power to refuse to enforce, and which, under all the circumstances, it would be unreasonable and inequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to; and that, under the circumstances, compound interest should not be allowed. *Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v. No payment had been made on account of principal or interest. Held that the enhanced rate of interest was a penalty under s. 74 of the Contract Act, and therefore was not recoverable, but that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the principal, together with interest calculated at 21 per cent. up to the dates when the instalments respectively became due, and at 12 per cent. from those dates to the date of the plaint and at 6 per cent. from that date until payment. *Nanjappa v. 3. — Claims by plaintiff against goods in respect of which suit brought—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 470 and 473—Costs of plaintiff—Freight—Wharfage—Demurrage.—In May 1893, S (defendant No. 4), a resident at Hissar in the Punjab, consigned 600 bags of rapeseed to K of Bombay, and delivered them to the plaintiffs for carriage to Bombay. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, S, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent F, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May F requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E D S & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by K for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit, praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage, and demurrage, and their costs of suit. Held (1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs; (2) that S, the fourth defendant, was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charge for freight and costs; (3) that the plaintiffs' charges for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession, not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. All that they could presumably be entitled to was a reasonable warehouse rent, which, however, they had not claimed. BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY Co. v. SASSOON . . . I. L. 3. — Claims by plaintiff against goods in respect of which suit brought—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 470 and 473—Costs of plaintiff—Freight—Wharfage—Demurrage.—In May 1893, S (defendant No. 4), a resident at Hissar in the Punjab, consigned 600 bags of rapeseed to K of Bombay, and delivered them to the plaintiffs for carriage to Bombay. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, S, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent F, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May F requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E D S & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by K for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit, praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage, and demurrage, and their costs of suit. Held (1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs; (2) that S, the fourth defendant, was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charge for freight and costs; (3) that the plaintiffs' charges for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession, not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. All that they could presumably be entitled to was a reasonable warehouse rent, which, however, they had not claimed. BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY CO. v. SASSOON . . . I. L. Form of issues requisite for trial—It may be laid down as a general rule that only such averments should be made the subject of issues as are essential to support the cause of action and are denied by the defendant, or as are essential to support a plea and are denied by the plaintiff. Mere pieces of evidence which are to be adduced to enable the Court to infer the truth of a material averment, ought not to be made the subject of a separate issue nor should the motives of the plaintiff in bringing the suit be put in issue, for if he have a good cause of action, his motives, as ill-will, pique etc., would not be an answer to it. 13. ——— Inconsistent issues—Undue influence—Trial of issues.—The execution of a hibanama having been denied by the plaintiff, a Mahomedan widow and purda-nashin, in a suit brought by her to have it set aside as fabricated, she also alleged that undue influence had been exercised upon her. It was decided upon the evidence that the instrument was genuine, having been executed by her of own free will. The above questions being inconsistent with one another, the latter should not have been admitted to form part of an issue together with the former. On an issue of undue influence, rightly raised, a Court should consider whether the gift in question (a) is one which a right-minded person might be expected to make; (b) is or is not an improvident act on the donor's part; (c) is such as to have required advice, if not obtained by the donor; and (d) whether the intention to make the gift originated with the donor, the principles being always the same, although the circumstances may differ. MAHOMED BUKSH KHAN v. elapsed, during the minority of the son, against whom, on his attaining full age, this suit was brought by the lessor to recover three years' rent of the renewed ijara. The contract of the adoptive mother and guardian was not personally binding upon the adopted son, and had not been ratified by him after attaining full age. It did not purport to deal with the estate to which he afterwards succeeded, but was entered into by the managers in their own names. Held that the case, as originally made in the plaint and raised by the issues framed in the Court of first instance, which covered a wider ground, viz., that the son was personally bound by the contract as being beneficial to him, and on the ground that he had ratified it after attaining full age, could not be altered in appeal into what would be a wholly different claim and raise entirely new issues, viz., that the managers, having power under the will, had charged the estate with the rent of the ijara, and that such charge remained upon it in the possession of the heir, who was liable to the extent of the assets received by him. The latter would have been in fact a new suit. Held also that the suit, even if treated as one against the respondent in regard to the estate, could not be sustained. 26. ————— Civil Procedure Code, ss. 566, 567—Framing a new issue by the Appellate Court—Evidence recorded in one suit admitted by consent at the hearing of another—Appellate Court, Power of.—In the Court of first instance the appellant, upon the title of a sister's son, was one of the plaintiffs who obtained a decree for an inheritance, the suit having been heard at the same time with another, in which relations of the deceased owner, alleging themselves to be of the same gotra with him, also obtained a decree as his heirs. Evidence in the latter suit was received in that of the appellant by consent of parties, both suits having been brought against the same defendant, whose title as widow of a son alleged to have been adopted by the last owner was set up in both, but was not proved. Appeals having been filed in both suits, in that brought by the sister's son a new issue was framed by the Appellate Court, under s. 566, Civil Procedure Code, as to, whether he was entitled as nearest of kin, or was excluded by the other claimants, whose suit was, at that time, compromised. Held that after what had taken place in regard to both suits the Appellate Court could frame this issue, although it was new, and had not been raised by the defendant's written answer. With reference to the evidence in the one suit having been imported as a whole into the other at the first hearing, and the admission of evidence upon the trial of the new issue, it was held that the parties intended that the evidence should be admitted and that no irregularity had taken place materially affecting the decree of the

Nature of issues

in general terms.—The issues should not be in too general terms, and should, if possible, embrace the whole matter in dispute. The plaintiffs, the cultivators of certain lands yielding rent to a pagoda, of which the first defendant was the recently-appointed dharmakarta, claimed to be declared proprietors of the said lands, to be exempted from the payment of rent, at the rate of two-thirds of the gross produce to be declared liable to pay a certain lower rent set forth in the plaint, and to obtain a refund of the amount paid under an order of the Sub-Collector in 1853 passed without jurisdiction in excess of the rent justly payable. The issue given by the Principal Sudder Ameen was "whether the first defendant is entitled to rent at the rate specified in document A." Held that this issue was too general and only embraced a part of the matter in dispute, and the issue "what is a fair and reasonable rate of rent" directed to be sent down to the lower Court. KUTTY SUBBRAMANIYA v. execution, but, perceiving that possession had not followed, had some doubt as to the nature of the transaction and examined a witness thereon. The result was that the transaction was found to be not an absolute sale, but a mortgage. As this fact, however, had been neither pleaded nor relied upon, the Munsif gave plaintiff a decree. The lower Appellate Court, finding that the preliminary foreclosure proceedings had not been taken by the plaintiff, reversed the decision. Held that it was incumbent on the Court of first instance, under Act VIII of 1859, s. 141, to frame an issue as to the nature of the transaction, and that the suit was properly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court because plaintiff had not foreclosed the mortgage.

61. ——— Suit for fees for officiating at marriages—Duty of Judge—Framing issues.—Plaintiff sued to recover certain fees from defendant, alleging that he had a right to officiate at marriages among the defendant's caste-people, and that, according to this right, he (plaintiff) had officiated at the marriage of the defendant's son at his request. The lower Court raised the issue, whether the plaintiff was entitled to the right alleged by him, and the issue was accepted by the parties without any objection. That Court held that, albeit plaintiff was head or senior of the caste, he could not have any right in that character to any fees at weddings, and accordingly dismissed the suit. In appeal the District Judge found that, if any such right had ever existed in the plaintiff, it had been taken away by Act XIX of 1844; he was also of opinion that the plaintiff had not been invited to assist and did not assist at the marriage ceremony in question, and he affirmed the decree of the Court below. Held by the High Court, in reversal of the decrees of the lower Courts, that Act XIX of 1844 did not apply to the case, and that the District Judge was bound to decide the question really involved in the issue, viz., whether, invited or uninvited, plaintiff was entitled by custom to the fees claimed by him. 62. ——— Omission to raise proper issues—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 139-141—Practice of Privy Council.—In a suit raising issues of fact it did not appear from the record transmitted from India that the Judge of the Zillah Court had in conformity with the Code of Civil Procedure (VIII of 1859), ss. 139-141, settled or recorded the issues in the suit, although he allowed evidence in the cause to be taken. In such circumstances the Judicial Committee postponed the hearing of the appeal until a certified copy of the proceedings in the cause should be transmitted, and, in the alternative of no such issues being settled, set aside the decree of the Sudder Court at Agra, with directions to that Court to remand the suit to the lower Court to be tried upon issues to be settled and recorded in conformity with the provisions of Act VIII of 1859.
